'Tap' Probers Refused Data On Shimon Tax Returns

Presidential Order May Be Requested; Officer Denies He Was Paid for Jobs

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) said yesterday the Treasury Department has turned down a request to provide Lieut. Joseph W. Shimon's income tax returns since 1940 to the District Committee probing wire-tapping.

According to Pepper, the Treasury Department said a Presidential order would be required to make the Shimon returns available.

Shimon was asked directly if he would turn over copies of his returns for the 10-year period during a three-hour closed-door morning quizzing of the Metropolitan Police lieutenant, Pepper said. Pepper said Shimon's attorney, Robert E. Lynch asked the committee to defer that question until later.

Pepper announced later that Committee Counsel Gerhard P. van Arkel has been instructed to confer with Lynch for the decision on whether Shimon would turn over copies of the income tax returns.

Pepper said Shimon denied receiving compensation, other than expense money, for wire tapping. He denied getting a $1000 bill shortly after tapping the telephones of Howard Hughes' associates when the millionaire plane maker was here in 1947 under investigation by the Senate committee headed by Senator Owen Brewster (R., Me.).

Pepper announced he has asked Van Arkel to call upon the Metropolitan Police for help in finding Abner "Chick" Lappin, the Washington man Shimon testified he was trailing when the trail led to the tapping of the Hughes telephone lines. He said he was after Lappin as the man who had been shadowing Senator Brewster, according to Pepper. Lappin has been reported to be in Mexico City.

Pepper said the committee is also trying to find former FBI man Henry Grunewald of Washington. He has been described by Shimon as a close social friend and in other testimony as intermediary between Shimon and the Senate committee in 1947.

Shimon's testimony yesterday was said to have thrown new light on how the wire tapping case broke. One highlight was that William J. Nolan, ex-partner of Shimon in an Arlington automo-

Senate Unit Backs Aid to Schools Hit By U. S. Activities

The Senate Labor Committee yesterday approved a bill providing Federal aid to school districts hard hit by Federal Government activities.

The legislation authorizes some Federal financial assistance to districts:

1. Where the school population has increased greatly because of Federal installations—such as military posts—in the area.

2. Where tax revenues for school district purposes have been reduced because the Government has acquired land and other property, taking them off the local tax roll.

1 Dies, 7 Hurt When Airliner Loses Engine

Cabin Shattered 21,000 Feet Over Colorado Rockies

Denver, Aug. 22 (AP)—A runaway engine flew off and ripped open an American Airlines plane high over the Colorado Rockies early today, but the ship landed safely 19 minutes later.

One passenger died of a heart attack. Seven of the 52 passengers and five crewmen suffered minor burns and injuries from oil and debris.

The four-engined DC-6, bound from Los Angeles to Chicago and New York, was flying in darkness at 21,000 feet and 295 miles an hour. Many of the passengers were asleep. One woman had taken off her girdle to rest more easily.

"Suddenly there was a boom, a flash and a rush of air," said James Mackris, 27, of Detroit, who was sitting in a front seat. The fuselage was torn away, window-to-window, over the three forward rows of seats.

Girdle Takes Off

"It was as though somebody slapped me on the head when the plane lost pressure," said Maxwell Miller, executive secretary of the Los Angeles Tenants Association.

"Where's my girdle," asked the woman.

A man ran down the aisle looking for his wife.

Jack Krevoy, 54, of Los Angeles, slumped over on his wife. When the plane landed, he was dead.

Mrs. Katharine Edgar Byron of 3539 Williamsburg lane nw., Washington, former Maryland Congresswoman, cautioned the other passengers not to light matches. She remembered that Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker had given the same advice to other passengers in an Eastern Airlines plane which crashed near Atlanta in February, 1940. Her husband, Representative William D. Byron, was killed in that crash.

Despite a cut on the head, Stewardess Joan Robinson, of Chicago, continued to help the passengers.

Capt. Bob Baker, pilot, and Co-pilot Bob Reinicke, both of Los Angeles, managed to get the wheels down despite loss of hydraulic pressure and much of the electrical system, and made a fast landing. They said the fuselage was cut away by the propellor or part of the engine which vibrated off after the prop flew loose.

"We should thank God," said one passenger.

"I hope the next plane isn't a convertible model," said another.

Forty-five of the passengers continued east in another plane.

War Agencies Ask 250,000 New Workers

Six-Day Week Funds Sought From Congress For Emergency

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

Detailed plans of the military agencies to hire upwards of 250,000 additional civilian employes were revealed yesterday in testimony released by the House Appropriations Committee.

The testimony also disclosed that some of the military offices and establishments are planning to place some of their employes on 6-day work weeks. Numerous requests to pay overtime were made.

These are among the highlights of the testimony of interest to Federal employes:

The Navy plans an over-all increase in its staff from 275,000 to 350,000 civilians, a boost of 75,000 employes, of whom 1500 would be at departmental headquarters here. In addition, naval "field" establishments here such as it gun factory, research centers, air field, etc., also would be expanded but no breakdown of civilian personnel was given.

The Air Force is seeking an over-all increase in its civilian staff of about 50,000 of whom less than 1000 would be at headquarters here. As of August 1, AF had 156,000 civilians, and it would continue to build up to 201,000-man staff under the program laid before the committee.

The Army would have an over-all increase of 134,181 civilians, counting 24,803 native employes in Japan and Korea. The number of new Civil Service employes would be 109,378 of whom about 4000 would be in the Washington area. Among the Army increases proposed here are:

Adjutant General's Office, 795 civilians; Quartermaster General, 339; Chief of Transportation, 88; Judge Advocate General, 17; Chief of Engineers, 88; Management Office, 47; Inspector General, 55; Provost Marshal General, 6; Chief of Ordnance, 196; Chief of Chemical Corps, 35, and Office of Surgeon General, 35.

The Marine Corps requested funds for a 300-man increase in its civilian staff headquarters here. Also, money to pay "overtime work as may be required."

The corps also sought $9,175,000 for "salaries and wages." This sum would provide for about 2000 employes in its depot supply system.

Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics would get a total increase of 14,424 civilians, of whom 300 would be at headquarters here.

Rear Admiral A. M. Pride, bureau chief, requested $550,760 to pay overtime to civilians here. He said he planned to place 700 civilians in his bureau on a six-day, 48-

Research Man Held in Theft Of Plutonium

Says He Only Wanted 'Souvenir'; FBI Finds No Espionage Evidence

Denver, Aug. 22 (AP).—A slight, smiling young research scientist was jailed today on charges that he robbed the Los Alamos Atomic project of plutonium—a vital atom bomb component.

Sanford Lawrence Simons, 28, and a father, was held in default of $10,000 bond to await trial under the Atomic Energy Act—with conviction carrying a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine.

FBI agent Russell Kramer said the stolen plutonium was recovered intact from a hiding place under Simon's Denver home. He said it was in a small glass vial but declined to disclose the quantity or the value adding he had heard reports of its worth varying from $500 to $200,000.

Kramer said Simons had been employed as a research scientist at the University of Denver since September of 1948 and, as far as authorities know now, has no connection with any organized espionage or with persons previously arrested as spy suspects. Nor has Simons any known link with Communist or subversive organizations.

The FBI agent said the bespectacled, pipe-smoking Simons readily admitted taking the highly fissionable plutonium but claimed that he had it only as a "souvenir" of Los Alamos, where he served as an enlisted man in the Army from August, 1944, to March, 1946, and as a civilian scientist from March, 1946, to July, 1946. Kramer said Simons apparently made no effort to dispose of the plutonium during the more than four years he had it.

Simons talked freely with newsmen and seemed little perturbed by his plight. He said he had expected arrest, commenting: "I had a bull by the tail all the time—and I knew it." He added that he had hidden the plutonium under his house because it is radio active and he had feared one of his children might come in contact with it.

The young scientist was married three years ago to a Denver school teacher and they have one child.

Malik Calls U. N. Korean Action Bluff

U. S. to Bear Blame For Dire Results, He Says; Austin's Reply: 'Applesauce'

Lake Success, Aug. 22 (AP) Russia demanded today that the United Nations end its "colossal international bluff" and order U. N. troops to leave Korea at once. The United States and Britain struck back with blistering attacks on the Soviet propaganda campaign.

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob A. Malik said continued intervention in Korea will only extend the conflict and the United States will have to bear the blame for "dire consequences."

Applesauce, Says Austin

Chief United States Delegate Warren R. Austin called Malik's charges of United States aggression in Korea "a big lie" and "applesauce." He said some of Russia's statements appeared to be based on "philosophy worthy of some witch-doctor."

Austin also brought before the Council for the first time a direct United States charge that Malik had made a false statement when he claimed Russia had supplied no military aid to the North Koreans since 1948.

Referring to the discovery of a Russian-made shell in Korea dated 1950, Austin said.

"This shell did not explode on the battlefield. It explodes in the Security Council. Of course, I recognize that this may be just another case of false Soviet labeling."

Malik earlier had implied to a reporter that U. N. forces may have faked the date on the shell. "It's easy to put a stamp on it," he said when asked for comment on the shell.

Worthy of Witch-Doctor

Austin again insisted that only Russia is in a position to put an end to the Korean fighting immediately by calling off the North Korean troops.

Hitting at Malik's charges that all countries taking part in the U. N. operations in Korea were United States satellites, Austin said:

"This is a philosophy worthy of some witch-doctor who has created so many soulless zombies in his own graveyard that he ends up believing the earth is peopled entirely by such creatures."

Austin added:

"The real task before us is to dispose of propaganda tricks, to stop dodging the real issues of the Korean conflict, and to carry forward with the central issue of restoring peace and security to the area."

Britain said Russia had built its own Korean propaganda campaign on the "gigantic falsehood" of American aggression, while trying to screen her own aggressive aims behind a "peace offensive."

Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb told the Council that if the free world remains united "it will be impossible for the Soviet government to achieve by violence, direct or indirect, those ends which at the mo-

'Mr. X' Is Hopeful

Kennan, Out for Year, Believes We Will Escape Russian War

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

George F. Kennan, the State Department's famous "Mr. X" still believes that the United States can achieve its goal of world peace without a war with Russia.

He said yesterday that it could be done with strong arms, confidence and determination, and good nerves.

Kennan, No. 1 American authority on Russia, who outlined the policy of "containment" in an article in Foreign Affairs in 1947 signed by "X", talked to reporters as he prepared to take a year's leave of absence from the State Department. He will spend the year at Princeton's Institute for Advanced Study.

Kennan almost acknowledged that he was "X." Asked by a reporter how he felt now about the policy of containment, he said:

"I see no reason to doubt the validity of what was stated in the 'X' article three years ago."

A moment later, laughing, he said he was not admitting that he and 'X' were the same.

Kennan, who began studying Russia as a State Department freshman in the 1920's and moved into the American Embassy in Moscow when recognition came in 1933, listed four requisites for

Majority of Senate Committee Urges Early UMT Enactment

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Prospects of early passage of universal military training brightened yesterday as a large majority of the Senate Armed Services Committee demanded quick approval of the bill.

Nine members of the committee—all those present—backed proposals that only brief hearings be held and that Congress be held in session until UMT becomes a law.

They spoke individually after hearing Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson and Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, urge approval to fill a "serious gap in our national security."

Both testified UMT cannot be put into effect while the Korean fighting continues, but that they want it passed so planning can be started now.

Bradley told the Senators that provisions must be made to "dovetail" the universal training of teen-age youths with the drafting

Jenkins Says Foes Entered Ringer in Ohio Primary Poll

By the United Press

Representative Thomas A. Jenkins (R., Ohio), told the House yesterday some "political skunks" in his State tried to beat him out of the November election by digging up another man named Thomas Jenkins and placing his name on the ballot.

He said "these political highbinders" picked out a 72-year-old retired worker and paid him $25 to let them put his name on the ticket as an "Independent," and promised him $1000 later.

The man's conscience bothered him, Jenkins said, and he spilled the whole "disgraceful hoax" to the election board.

Jenkins said the "hoax" was attempted under a new election law which places the names of "independents" in the same ballot column as the names of regular party candidates.

Senate Votes Aid to Families Of Servicemen

By the United Press

The Senate last night passed a bill to grant living allowances of $45 to $75 a month for the families of enlisted servicemen.

The bipartisan measure was adopted by unanimous voice vote soon after the House Armed Services Committee approved a similar bill with allowances ranging up to $85 a month. The latter measure is scheduled for action Thursday.

The committee knocked out a controversial section of the House bill to guarantee free medical and hospital care for servicemen's dependents. The medical proposal will be taken up in separate legislation later this week.

Representative Brooks (D., La.) said the committee will couple the issue with consideration of several pending bills to authorize the drafting of doctors for the armed forces.

Dependency allowance legislation has been given high priority in Congress to relieve the financial plight of thousands of reservists and National Guardsmen suddenly called to duty in the Korean crisis.

In both bills, the benefits would be more than 50 percent higher than the servicemen's family allowances of World War II.

The final schedule of allowances probably will be a compromise, worked out by a joint conference committee.

The Senate bill provides for Government contributions varying according to the enlisted man's grade and the number of his dependents. The enlisted man himself would have to add a specified sum from his own pay.

Allies Knock Out Roadblock, Open Drive to Clear Out Infiltrators

Tokyo (Wednesday), Aug. 22 (AP)—American soldiers, planes, tanks and artillery forced the Reds into a slow, bloody retreat today in the area of greatest menace north of Taegu.

After smashing a penetration by 1000 Communists about 10 miles from that key American supply base, the Americans advanced a half mile this morning despite heavy Red resistance.

Associated Press Correspondent Don Whitehead said a Red concentration there may be expected to attempt an offensive within 48 hours.

Decision Seen in 48 Hours

He quoted Col. John Michaelis, commanding officer of the U. S. 27th Infantry Regiment, as saying:

"There could be a decision in the next 48 hours and if we stop them we will break the back of this drive."

Supported by South Koreans, the Americans overran the wedge made in their lines by the Communists. Then they engaged the main North Korean force which had been brought up to exploit any break-through.

At dawn today, American planes attacked troop concentrations. Jets and Mustangs flew low over hills and valleys. They gunned troop masses and destroyed a tank.

In this sector north of Taegu, three enemy divisions totaling probably 30,000 men and paced by tanks have been beating against the Allied defense wall since Sunday. Total strength of the Reds massed on the front north and west of Taegu, has been estimated at 60,000 men.

3 Attacks Stopped in South

Last night, the Americans and South Koreans stopped three probing attacks down the road toward Taegu—vital communications center because of its double-track railroad supply line to the main port of Pusan.

In the other menacing sector, on the south end of the front defending Pusan, two Red attacks were beaten back during last night and a third at dawn today. The Reds were making an effort to recapture high ground on both sides of the city of Haman which has changed hands five times in three days of bitter fighting.

Haman is 9 miles northwest of

Los Angeles Puts Registration Bite On Communists

Los Angeles, Aug. 22 (AP).—The board of supervisors today adopted ordinances requiring Communists living in unincorporated areas of Los Angeles county to register with the sheriff within 10 days.

The law, adopted as an emergency measure, also requires Communists living in cities to register if they work or regularly pass through unincorporated territory. The supervisors have jurisdiction only in county areas.

Penalty for failure to register calls for a jail sentence up to six months and a fine up to $500.

"We believe we can enforce such an ordinance," said County Counsel Harold Kennedy who prepared the legislation. "We are pioneering; this is the first law of its kind."

Wounded GI, Now At Reed, Rode Red Back to U. S. Lines

The fly-boys are performing all kinds of amazing feats over Korea, but nothing to compare with the amazing airborne adventure of Artilleryman Donald P. Bazzurro, 23, of New York City.

Lieutenant Bazzuro, shot down from an observation plane five miles behind enemy lines, and one leg smashed, returned to American lines by air—aboard the back of a Red Korean soldier whom he captured and chauffeured at pistol point. The lieutenant is presently recovering from his wound at Walter Reed Hospital here. (Story and picture on B-11.)

Ex-Truman Aide Named in Deal On Sugar at Senate Crime Quiz

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Harry Truman's one-time senatorial secretary yesterday was charged with—and denied—taking a fee to try to line up some sugar back in 1945 when it was hard to get.

He is Victor R. Messall, secretary to the President from 1935 to 1941 when Mr. Truman was a Senator, and now a public relations counsel with offices in the Ring Building.

The charge came from David Lubben, a New Jersey businessman who told the Senate Crime Committee a rambling, fantastic tale of how he went into partnership with "hoodlums" in order to get sugar for his candy company, how he paid thousands of dollars in the black market and thousands more to buy off OPA and alcohol tax agents and finally turned over $910,000 just to be rid of his partners.

The whole day's testimony added up to the most intriguing public hearing yet by the crime committee. It was part of an effort to show the penetration by racketeers of legitimate businesses.

Lubben, a husky, serious man, told the Senators he paid Messall either $1000 or $1500. He said Messall had a wall full of pictures "of you Senators shaking hands with people." But, he added, he never got the sugar quota he was seeking; he only received "more letters for more money."

If Messall ever really made any effort to get the quota, Lubben

Life-Saving Efforts Fail

Young Wife Dies by Poison; Note Blames 'Other Woman'

A dose of poisonous acid yesterday ended the life of a pretty dime store clerk who blamed "another woman" for her domestic difficulties.

She was Mrs. Stella Kennedy, 25, of 3914 5th st. n.w., who died in Garfield Hospital an hour and a half after taking the acid.

Mrs. Kennedy left a note for her husband, David, an ironworker, in which she professed her love, mentioned their difficulties, and laid the blame on the "other woman," police said.

Police efforts to administer an anttidote for the poison were futile.

Mrs. Inez Overcash, from whom the Kennedys rent an apartment at the 5th street address, said Mrs. Kennedy who worked for Kresge's 5 and 10, had been home with stomach trouble for two days.

She went to a drug store about 4 p.m. An hour later, Mrs. Overcash said, Mrs. Kennedy called downstairs and told her she had taken poison. Mrs. Overcash called police.

Pvts. C. F. Krogmann and E. J. White found Mrs. Kennedy, fully clothed, lying unconscious on a studio couch. The note to her husband was anchored by the empty acid bottle.

Private Krogmann said that though they arrived only 10 minutes after Mrs. Kennedy had taken the poison, they were unable to force the unconscious woman to drink the milk prescribed as an antidote.

The Kennedys, who come from Clintwood, Va., had been married six years, according to Mrs. Overcash. The landlady said she thought the couple was childless.

Mrs. Kennedy died at 6:20 p. m. Deputy Coroner Dr. Richard M. Rosenberg said he will issue a suicide certificate today.

General Dean Stabbed to Death As He Lay Hurt, Army Hears

With U. S. Forces in Korea (Wednesday) Aug. 23 (U.P.).—Maj. Gen. William F. Dean, the hero of Taejon, was stabbed to death by a North Korean as he lay helplessly wounded—a prisoner of war—outside the burning city, intelligence reports said today.

The Communist who murdered him may now himself be a prisoner of war somewhere in the American defense perimeter.

Dean disappeared after he remained in Taejon with a small rear guard of his Twenty-fourth Infantry Division as the Reds swept into the city.

The story is that Dean ordered the withdrawal and moved out with the last of his rear guard. He became separated from other members of the party. He made it as far as a railroad underpass on the outskirts. A North Korean shot him through the side. He dropped, and was unable to move. The North Korean then stabbed him to death.

Some of the details came from a young Korean who served the American Army as an interpreter before the capture of Taejon, was captured by the North Koreans and worked for them until he was recaptured.

This Korean said he was called upon to identify Dean's body because North Korean intelligence men were puzzled by the two stars on his uniform.

The interpreter said the Communist who murdered Dean was later captured by the American Army and is now held as a prisoner.

Control Bill Accord Seen in Conference

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Democratic legislators believe that in a Senate-House conference later this week they can produc an effective and acceptable economic controls bill.

They hope, in fact, to produce a sum better than the total of its parts—a better bill, from the Administration's standpoint, than either the measure passed by the House or the one approved Monday by the Senat.

The first meeting of the conferees will take place Thursday afternoon. The plan is to continue through Friday and to produce an agreed-upon amalgamation by late Monday.

Senator Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.), head of the Senate conferees and chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, said yesterday he would attempt to get agreement on the best features in both bills. If he succeeds, he will produce legislation that meets President Truman's best expectations.

Likes House Price Feature

He will attempt, it seems clear, to substitute the House version relating to price and wage ceilings. This allows the President discretion to fix ceilings when and where he chooses, and on individual items and industries, or throughout the economy generally.

The Senate version insists that if the President applies ceilings, they be invoked simultaneously and "generally" on virtually all commodities, products and workers.

It is on this section that the largest fight is expected. On Monday, the Senate voted 50 to 36 to prevent the President from applying selective controls.

Both the Senate and House bills prescribe that when price controls are applied to any item, wage controls—presumably on the workers who manufacture that item—be applied at the same time. Although the Administration would not like to be bound in this fashion, it probably cannot escape it.

Other major discrepancies in the two bills which must be reconciled:

1. The date. The House bill would extend the economic control powers until only next June 30. Democrats will seek to adopt the Senate period, which runs until June 30, 1952.

2. Commodity Speculation. The House has specifically refused to give the Administration power to regulate commodity exchanges to prevent speculation. The Senate, initially taking the same position, later accepted an amendment ordering the exchanges to do their own policing to prevent excessive speculation, with Federal penalties for violation. The Administration obviously hopes to retain the Senate provisions.

3. Administration. The Senate adopted an amendment placing all administration of priorities and allocations in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce. The House bill, however, allows the President full discretion in delegating such authority.

A compromise seems possible here, limiting to the Secretary of Commerce authority over industrial commodities, but letting the Agriculture Department allocate food and agricultural supplies.

4. Financing Expansion. The House bill authorizes the Government to create new corporations and to borrow up to two billion dollars to procure raw materials and build new facilities. The Senate forbids the creation of new corporations, limits the borrowing power to 300 million dollars, and requires that appropriations be secured for anything above that.

Conceivably the Senate provision, included in an amendment written by Senator Taft (R., Ohio), might open up the prospect of political wrangling, on the location of new plants, in congressional appropriations groups. The danger, however, is not thought too great, and was not a factor during World War II.

5. Civilian Allocations. An amendment adopted by the Senate provides that when any materials are allocated for defense producers, and a dislocation of normal distribution results, the President must assure each individual business a fair share of what is left over

This would mean, for instance, that if a small portion of some scarce material is allocated for military needs, the Administration would be obliged to devise some allocation system for the remaining supply on the item, used by civilian producers.

The purpose is to protect small businesses, assuring them of a fair proportion of the civilian supply. It may, however, require a much larger administrative apparatus than the Commerce Department proposes to establish at this time.

Jury to Hear Weisband's Plea Sept. 11

MRS. WEISBAND
. . . defends husband

William W. Weisband, 41-year-old Arlington resident, is due to enter a plea September 11 to a contempt charge in Los Angeles stemming from an alleged failure to appear before a grand jury investigating espionage.

A former employe at the Signal Corps' top-secret Arlington Hall Station, Weisband was arraigned on the charge Monday in Federal Court, Los Angeles.

His wife, Mabel, said her husband was suspended from his post at Arlington Hall Station for reasons she did not know.

She said she and her husband both worked for the Armed Forces Security Agency at Arlington Hall. She was suspended at the same time as her husband, but was reinstated August 10 and asked whether she wanted to resign or have her position terminated.

Mrs. Weisband said she resigned.

She said she was given no reason for her suspension or reinstatement.

Both she and her husband, who live at 2503 S. Adams st., Arlington, have said they do not know why Weisband was arrested.

The Associated Press in Los Angeles said Weisband appeared before the grand jury there July 12. The Government says it dirricted him to appear again July 19, but he failed to do so and returned to Arlington.

A second subpena was served on him at Arlington, according to Associated Press.

On August 16, he arrived in Los Angeles, again appeared before the grand jury, and was arrested on a contempt complaint. He has been in jail since, the Associated Press said.

The FBI arrested him in Los Angeles last Wednesday.

Korean War May Be Over by Late Winter, Johnson Estimates; Defense Cost to Stay Up

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson estimates the Communists can be pushed back out of South Korea by late winter but that America must count on spending 25 billion dollars annually for defense for some years to come.

Johnson's statement, made before the House Appropriations Committee late last month during testimony on th esupplemental military budget, was released to the press yesterday.

He emphasized that part of the funds are to handle the Korean situation and the rest to build up our military froces gene.ally to meet the threat of communism.

Defense spending, he said, should level off in 1955, under the new higher level of forces agreed to, at $24,600,000,000, not counting foreign arms aid.

Now before Congress are 1951 appropriations for the armed forces totaling close to that amount —13.3 billions in the regular budget and 11.5 in the supplemental. The latter, Johnson made plain, is based on the "hope" the Communists can be driven back of the Thirty-Eighth Parallel in "six or eight months" and that the United Nations forces there are not directed to conquer all Korea.

If things do not go according to plan or the fighting continues beyond the border, the testimony showed, more funds must be provided.

Size of Forces Planned

The published testimony revealed officially for the first time many details of the size of forces planned under the expansion program. Here is the picture:

1. Army—Will add one division, making a total of 11, not counting the four National Guard divisions being mobilized or the six training divisions. The big increases in expanding the Army from 593,000 to 834,000 men come in building units in the Far East or slated for shipment there to full war strength.

When the Korean war started, it was disclosed, each infantry regiment except one was short an infantry battalion. This meant only 25 battalions instead of 36 in the four divisions in Japan. The latter also were 11 artillery batteries short.

2. Air Force—Will expand from 48 to 58 groups this year. (A further boost to 69 groups is planned next year, it was said. Comparable Army and Navy enlargement next year was not given.)

By next June, the Air Force expects to expand to 548,000 officers and men, procure 4428 new planes with regular and supplemental funds, and have an active aircraft inventory of 11,000 planes.

3. Navy—The fleet will get two more big and two more small aircraft carriers. This will make a total of nine attack and 10 CVLs and CVEs in full operation, plus one small carrier in reduced commission used for training and three CVEs employed for transport.

Four More Carriers

There will be three more attack carrier groups—a total of 12—and three more anti-submarine squadrons, for a total of 10. In addition there will be 27 patrol squadrons, an aggregate of 27, and 16 Marine air squadrons, figures presented showed. A total of 5491 Regular Navy and Marine Corps planes will be operated—an increase of 1102—and the same number of planes for reservists—1844.

A total of 2377 naval planes will be ordered under the expanded procurement program.

There is this expansion in the operating Fleet: Combatant vessels will be increased from 243 to 282; amphibious, patrol and other auxiliary types from 386 to 629; a total of 911 operating ships.

Ships will operate at 85 percent of war complement except the Pacific amphibious force which will be at 100 percent strength.

Questioned on Intelligence

Secretary Johnson was questioned about the decision two years ago to withdraw American occupation forces from Korea and write it off militarily. He indicated it was made at a level above the Pentagon.

Representative Harry Sheppard (D., Calif.) asked him if that "was a decision of top echelon and not at the moment a part of the military conclusions as such?"

"Correct, sir," Johnson replied.

There also was discussion of whether American intelligence had warning of the Korean attack.

Asked if the intelligence system was providing the information that should be expected, Johnson replied.

"I suppose no one is fully satisfied with the intelligence that comes in, but I think we have a right to expect now that our intelligence is going to be pretty good."

Representative Sikes (D., Fla.) commented that there had to be a build-up of men, materials, equipment and fuel by the North Koreans and said that "surely our intelligence can spot those things."

"The intelligence did spot them and reported Sunday morning raids for a year or so, and that a build-up had existed for a period of a year or so," Johnson said.

"Was there no report of such a build-up just prior to the actual attacks in Korea?" Sikes pressed.

Australia Gets 100 Millions From World Bank

By The Associated Press

The World Bank yesterday made a 25-year loan of 100 million dollars to Australia.

The loan, the first made by the Bank to Australia and the first to any southwest Pacific country, will be used for development projects, both private and governmental, in the next two years.

Eugene R. Black, president of the Bank, announced also that the Bank has indicated to the Australian government that it is willing, in principle, to make further loans during the next five years.

Cancer 'Victim' Returns to Navy Duty

President Truman yesterday signed a bill to restore to active duty a naval officer who four years ago was told he had cancer and was going to die.

It was the climax of a long fight by Lieut. Comdr. Edwin M. Rosenberg, of Des Moines, Iowa., to get back on shipboard. He had been promised sea duty probably in the Pacific area—when the bill went through.

In 1946 Navy doctors discovered Rosenberg had cancer of the kidney and groin. He was told he couldn't live.

But radiation treatments restored the Naval Academy graduate health. Having been retired because of cancer, he launched a fight to be returned to active duty.

The private bill to accomplish this was sponsored in the Senate by Bourke Hickenlooper and in the House by Paul Cunningham of Iowa.

2 Fleets of B-29s Bomb Vital Targets

Near Hyonpung

Air Marines Assist GIs In New Drive

Aboard a United States Navy Escort Carrier off Korea, Aug. 22 (U.P.).—Marine Corps pilots returned this evening to report they had been in on the start of a big, new drive to knock the North Koreans out of a bridgehead on the Naktong River.

It was indicated the drive was aimed at the Hyonpung bridgehead on the east bank of the river 15 miles southwest of Taegu—the only one the enemy still holds.

The Marines showered death on the North Koreans, in their foxholes, with 500-pound proximity-fused anti-personnel bombs that burst in the air and send their jagged fragments downward.

The Leathernecks were called out this afternoon to give their specialized close support—right ahead of the front lines—to the Army drive, they said.

Marine fliers skimmed low over the hillsides and vital ridges holding enemy concentrations and gun emplacements, seeking out the hidden enemy in the same type of daredevil flying they exhibited in the Yongsan area a few days ago.

An American barrage was poured into the same area as Army infantry moved against the Reds. American lines in this area have been under constant harassment.

One flight, following instructions by an air spotter, crossed the Naktong and knocked out a big enemy gun—believed to be a 155-mm. one—which was dropping shells on American advance positions.

The Marines said "special rockets" eliminated this gun from further consideration.

U. S. Bombing Of Chongjin 'Highly Successful'

Tokyo (Wednesday) Aug. 23 (AP). A Far East naval summary said today an American destroyer carried out a "highly successful" bombardment Sunday of Chongjin, the important North Korea east coast industrial center.

Chongjin, only 60 miles from from Russian territory, was hit with 550 tons of bombs by Air Force Superforts Saturday and the B-29s revisited the city Tuesday and dropped more than 500 tons.

The delayed report of the destroyer's night bombardment said the ship started fires that were visible 18 miles at sea.

Targets of the naval guns were the former Mitsubishi Iron Works, railroad spurs and yards, harbor installations, warehouses and a radio station.

The iron works, once run by the Japanese, also was a key target for the B-29s.

Record Turkey Crop

A record crop of 44,550,000 turkeys this year was forecast yesterday by the Department of Agriculture.

Tokyo (Wednesday), Aug. 23 (AP). Two fleets of B-29 Superforts, the larger flying within 60 miles of Soviet territory, dropped 850 tons of high explosives Tuesday on Red targets in North Korea.

Seventy B-29s blasted Chongjin in a one-hour attack with 700 tons of general purpose bombs, smacking marshalling yards, the city's deep-water port and dock facilities and the iron works, formerly known as Mitsubishi.

Chongjin, a large industrial city, is on the east coast of North Korea, 40 miles from the Manchurian border and less than 60 miles from Russian maritime provinces.

The 500-pound bombs were dropped by radar on the Chongjin targets through an overcast.

Fighters Active

The other fleet of Superforts in smaller formations cascaded 150 tons of bombs on bridges and smaller industrial targets. The size of the smaller fleet was not mentioned.

A senior officer who went on today's B-29 strikes said a traffic jam at the Chongjin marshalling yards was "an indication that the United States Air Force's interdiction program to destroy terminal rail points, particularly in that area, has been successful."

For the second day, the United States Fifth Air Force and the Royal Australian Air Force took advantage of perfect flying weather to lambast Communist troops and vehicles.

Returning pilots reported the combined job "cost the North Koreans important equipment and supplies they could ill afford to lose."

Taking part were jets, B-26 light Invader bombers, F.51 Mustangs and F-82 twin Mustang all-weather fighters. They straffed troops and hit a tank northwest of Taegu, machinegunned supplies hidden in an orchard and blasted enemy entrenchments and gun positions on a mountain top near Pohang, on the east coast.

Australian mustang fighters did some expert fighting in late afternoon strikes east of Chinju and north of Taegu in south central Korea. They blasted enemy artillery positions within 150 yards of Allied troops.

The British Navy tightened its control of the west coast of Korea with the addition of a squadron of Sunderland flying boats. The squadron of four-engine planes, attached to the U. S. Navy for operational purposes, flew to the war zone several weeks ago from Hongkong. Its arrival was not reported officially until Tuesday.

Reds Can Still Mount Attack, Pentagon Says

North Korean Communists "still have the capability of putting on a major attack" despite their heavy losses, a military spokesman said yesterday.

The Pentagon spokesman said the Communists have effected a "fairly good-sized build-up" in the Chinju area on the southern front and still have a heavy concentration of troops west of the Naktong River in the Waegwan-Kunwi area northwest of Taegu.

He said the Sixth North Korean Division in the Chinju area obviously had been reinforced because the Communists there were making attacks in regiment strength where they were able to throw only battalions and companies into the battle a few days ago.

An Air Force spokesman reported the Air Force had flown more than 13,000 combat sorties in the Korean war through Sunday.

He said the F-80 jet Shooting Star had the best operational record of any fighter being used in the Korean war, including the piston-engine F-51 Mustang.

The F-80 had averaged a sortie a day on 39½ days out of 42, starting July 1, the spokesman said. The F-80 flew nearly half of the more than 13,000 sorties through August 20.

Austrian Newsmen Tour D. C., Plan Maryland Visits

Ten Austrian journalists, visiting Washington as a part of a tour of the United States, will visit the Agricultural Research Center at Beltsville and the Montgomery County Fair at Gaithersburg today.

Yesterday the journalists, who are the guests of The Washington Post during their week-long stay in the Capital, visited the Library of Congress, the Folger Shakespeare Library, the National Gallery of Art and the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

They will visit the Bureau of Plant Industry and Bureau of Dairy Industry at Beltsville this morning, have luncheon at the Log Cabin there and take in the fair in the afternoon.

Unit Advised By Russian, Prisoner Says

With United States Forces in Korea (Wednesday), Aug. 23 (AP).—A North Korean army captain—now a prisoner—said today he served with the Chinese Eighth Route Army until ordered to join the North Korean Red Army in July, 1947.

Captain Pak Tong Hyup said he was one of 1500 Koreans in the First Regiment of the 166th Division of the Chinese Communist Army. These Koreans crossed the Yalu River into North Korea at Sinuiju in July, 1947. Sinuiju is just across the Manchurian border in the northwestern section of Korea.

Pak said these North Koreans, trained by the Chinese Reds, were stationed on Sinuiju until June 16, 1950, when they were ordered to move down to the 38th parallel, near Kaesong, for the invasion of South Korea. Most of them, he said, were born and raised in Manchuria.

Pak said the 164th Division of the Chinese Communist Army also had a regiment composed of Koreans only. They crossed the Yalu River to join the North Korean Army.

Pak's regiment had six Russian-made tanks and a Russian adviser who worked behind the lines.

Asked who started the war, Pak said "we did."

Pak said the North Koreans started shooting at 4 a. m. on June 25.

Asked why he fought, he said "for unification of the fatherland."

Prisoners are afraid to have their names reported to the International Red Cross in Geneva for fear their families may be persecuted at home by Communist officials. North Koreans, they said, have been ordered not to be taken prisoner.

Estimated 800

French Allot One Battalion To U. N. Force

Rambouillet, France, Aug. 22 (AP). France will send a special infantry battalion of probably 800 soldiers to fight in the United Nations ranks in Korea, informed sources said today.

The Cabinet decided to send a land force after an all-day meeting.

This decision was taken in response to the recent appeal by U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie to 53 U. N. members for substantial aid to the United States and South Korean forces battling the North Korean invasion.

The French government announced its decision in a letter dispatched to Lie, but withheld details until the letter is received at Lake Success.

A Defense Ministry spokesman said "I have no idea just when the troops will be sent." He said they probably will be volunteers from the French regulars now assigned in Indo-China.

Up to now, government informants had said France could not send any soldiers to Korea. The official line was that France was already doing her part in fighting communism, with 150,000 troops engaged against Red-led Indo-Chinese guerillas. France contribution to U. N. forces had been limited to a naval sloop.

Australia, Britain, Canada, New Zealand, Turkey and Thailand are among other nations which have pledged troops.

Unofficial sources in Brussels reported today Belgium is to send about 1000 men, subject to a decision by the Cabinet Friday.

Quake Toll Now 80

Calcutta, India, Aug. 22 (AP).—The known death toll in Assam Province from last Tuesday's violent earthquake rose to 80 today. Unofficial accounts said more than 200 persons were killed.

Nehru Not Going to Peiping

New Delhi, Aug. 22 (AP).—A government of India press release said today there is no prospect of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru visiting Communist China "in the foreseeable future."

The note said no official invitation had been received by Nehru to visit Peiping.

It did not deny, however, that Nehru received a semiofficial or unofficial invitation from Peiping as reported by official sources here Sunday.

Reliable reports persist that Nehru received an invitation to visit China from Madame Sun Yetsen, vice chairman of the Chinese Communist government. Informants said earlier that Nehru was giving careful consideration to the invitation as a possible opportunity to further his efforts toward a peaceful Korea settlement.

Sister Certain Burma Doctor Will Go Free

Rangoon, Burma, Aug. 22 (AP).—Dr. Gordon S. Seagrave's missionary sister expressed confidence today that "everything will be all right" for her brother held here on suspicion of aiding the rebel Karens.

Seagrave, famous veteran of the late Gen. Joseph Stilwell's wartime retreat from Burma, is held at the Rangoon central jail while the government interrogates him about his alleged connections with the Karens.

His sister, Rebecca Seagrave, looked worried and distressed as she said she was satisfied all "that can be done for Gorden is being done."

Miss Seagrave indicated her brother's arrest came as a surprise. She said she had not heard from him for several months because there had been no adequate mail service between Rangoon and the remote interior, where his hospital was located on the China-Burma border.

New Tax Bill Debate Set For Thursday

By The Associated Press

The Senate Finance Committee stamped its final approval on the five billion dollar tax-boosting bill yesterday, after putting in a formula exempting from taxation all pay received by GIs in combat zones. It also voted to exempt $200 a month of the income received by their officers.

Chairman George (D., Ga.) said the Senate will begin debate on the bill Thursday, with passage assured by bi-partisan backing.

Shortly after the committee acted, Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) softened his excess profits tax proposal to make the top tax 85 percent, instead of 100 percent, on highest corporation earnings that exceed "normal" profits.

This change was made, he said, "to remove any danger that the excess profits tax might adversely affect the incentives to produce."

The fighting men's exemption would be confined strictly to personnel of the armed services in combat zones.

A GI would owe no taxes on pay he received while actually in Korea or any other fighting zone. He would pay taxes on income received while serving elsewhere.

Third Island Occupied by South Koreans

A Korean Port, Aug. 22 (AP).—A Korean navy spokesman said today South Korean marines landed yesterday on Ejak Island off Inchon, port of Seoul on the Yellow Sea.

The landing was the third in the past week far behind enemy lines in that area. No details were given.

South Korean marines aided by Allied planes were mopping up enemy forces in the Tongyong area on the extreme southern coastal front.

The marines landed from the sea Friday on the south coast to prevent a possible invasion of Koje Island just east of the Tongyong Peninsula.

Capture of Koje by the Reds would threaten the main Allied supply base at Pusan.

The Korean marines reported capture of more than 100 Red troops. The prisoners, mostly youngsters, reported supplies were becoming increasingly scarce and said they felt there was little chance for the Reds to win.

West Virginia Society Rallies to Johnson's Defense

Home-state friends of Defense Secretary Louis Johnson declared last night they will not "sit idly by and let critics crucify a great leader."

A picnic meeting of the West Virginia Society of Washington was turned into a "defend Johnson" rally when Howard Starling, executive vice president, made a speech praising the Defense Secretary and denouncing his critics.

U. S. Tanks Smash Red Armor

Masan and 35 miles northwest of Pusan.

The American southern flank was straightened out and all ground lost there Monday regained by these actions:

The Thirty-fifth Regimental Combat Team pushed an outnumbering enemy force off a commanding ridge near the front line village of Chungam.

The Fifth Regimental Combat Team stormed up steel hills to take high ground near Tundok, just south of Chungam.

Negro troops of the Twenty-fourth Infantry Regiment retook "Battle" Mountain for the fifth time in four days.

The Reds have lost 10 tanks in three nights of fighting. Four were knocked out by big American Pershing tanks and artillery in a duel at 300 yards Tuesday. This occurred more than 10 miles north of Taegu in the same area where 1000 Reds infiltrated to harass supply lines to the front.

Reports poured in from all sectors that Red morale was cracking. Prisoners of war said they were hungry and short of supplies. Some were 'teenagers who had been conscripted.

Nevertheless North Korean commanders drove them into searing American machinegun and rifle fire poured down from defense positions on high ground. When the Reds retreated, American artillery and mortars pounded them as long as they were in range.

The Red penetration behind the United States Twenty-seventh Regiment and First South Korean Division was made under cover of darkness last night, a South Korean Army spokesman said.

Today's United States Eighth Army communique said "the mission of the United States attack this morning was to clear the area of enemy troops and secure the supply road."

A second Communist offensive aimed directly at Pusan was reported still building up on the south front before Masan. South Korean marines, driving inland from points where they have made amphibious landings on the south coast, ran into strong Red resistance late Tuesday. They were hit by artillery and mortar fire. These marines are operating on the southern flank of the United States Twenty-fifth Division.

Four 45-ton General Pershing tanks bested nine lighter and more maneuverable T-34 enemy tanks in the furious two-hour battle at 300-yard range on a valley road 12 miles north of Taegu.

The Pershings knocked out two Red tanks, United States artillery destroyed two others and the five remaining were sent running for cover. The United States tanks escaped serious damage.

Roadblock Smashed

While the tank fight roared, United States ground troops and warplanes smashed a roadblock set up by infiltrating Reds two miles farther back along the same road.

The roadblock cut off supplies from Taegu for the front for two hours.

The Reds had gained control of the supply road by sneaking small arms, mortars and machineguns to the top of a ridge that was higher than the one Americans occupied to safeguard the road.

But artillery fire from the United States Twenty-seventh Regiment and machinegun and rocket strafing attacks by United States Navy, Marine and Air Force planes drove the invaders from their vantage point after three hours of heavy fighting.

During the day a group of 40 or 50 North Koreans tried a "Banzai" attack against an American unit led by Sergt. Stephan Walston of Greenville, N. C.

Asked if his men had turned back the Reds screaming the Japanese battle cry as they attacked, Walston commented only: "We killed them."

On the central front, First Cavalry Division artillery lobbed shells into Red troop concentrations and supply dumps on the west bank of the Naktong River. The South Korean First Infantry Division punched out a short advance east of Waegwan.

Eastern Sector Quiet

The eastern end of the Allied defense line was quiet but the South Korean forces manning it reported stiffening enemy resistance to their patrol actions.

South Korean marines made their third island landing Monday off Inchon, the port for Communist captured Seoul on the west coast of Korea.

The landing was on Ejak Island. No details were given. South Korean forces already had been put ashore on Tokchok and Yonchung islands in the same general area, deep in enemy territory and far from the main area of United Nations operations.

Other South Korean marines, with the aid of the United States Air Force, were mopping up enemy forces on Koje Island, just east of the Tongyong peninsula on the extreme southern coastal front. A strong enemy force on the island could pose a threat to the United States supply base of Pusan and the South Korean naval port of Chinhae.

Boyish Red prisioners taken on Koje Island were quoted by a South Korean Navy spokesman as saying their supplies were becoming increasingly scarce.

The increasing Red pressure on the Allied perimeter gave indication the Reds were still determined on a general offensive to win the war by August 31, the date set by North Korean Premier Kim Il Sung.

But their big push was behind schedule—it was first advertised to open on Liberation Day, August 15—and confidence mounted in Allied quarters that the Reds had missed their real chance for a knockout punch at the Allies.

Twenty-Fifth Division Regains All Lost Ground

With the United States Twenty-fifth Division on the Southern Front (Wednesday) Aug. 23 (U.P.).—The Twenty-fifth Division has regained all the ground it lost late Monday and early yesterday.

The infantrymen believe they have firmly halted the latest Communist drive aimed at Pusan, 30 miles eastward.

A division spokesman said early today that after days of fierce fighting there was no great pressure in this vital sector.

The Reds have been making dawn and twilight attacks, in increasing strengths on a 15-mile front from Chingdong-ni to the vicinity of Haman.

Late Monday they drove the Fifth Regiment off high ground near Chingdong-ni on the left flank, and early yesterday they drove a company of the Thirty-fifth Regiment off a hill position on the right flank. There was another attack in the center.

Now all these positions are ours, and the front seems firm.

G. I. Feet Wet, Whistles Dry On Korea Front

No ration of liquor or beer is issued to American troops in Korea, the Army said yesterday.

In response to an inquiry, an Army spokesman told reporters no beer has been shipped from the United States to the Far East since the Korean fighting began. He declared the Army never ships liquor there.

Officers and men in Japan are free to buy liquor and beer produced in that country or shipped in commercially. It is presumed here that rice wine and beer also are obtainable from local sources in Korea.

ment they seem determined to secure."

In a 45-minute speech, obviously aimed more at the millions of Asians than at his fellow Security Council delegates, Malik charged that the whole Korean war was plotted by the ruling circles in the United States to further colonial ambitions.

"This is only a colonial war against the freedom-loving peoples of Asia," Malik said. "We should put an end to this bluff. We should force the aggressor to withdraw."

He said the United States was backed only by Britain and her dominions instead of the 53 nations claimed by Austin.

"The United States is now trying to force others to send their men as cannon fodder," he said. He added that they might get some "to join them in this dirty, shameful colonial war that began in 1945 in Indonesia and is being carried on by France in Indo-China."

Jebb said Russia's repeated attacks on imperialism "is really nothing but an attempt to conceal the fact that it is not America, but quite another power which is trying to clamp down a despotism on the world as a whole."

He said the Soviet rulers have always had some "peculiar views about aggression." Stalin himself, Jebb recalled, had blamed Britain and France in 1939 for starting the war against Germany.

"If Stalin himself subscribed to this remarkable analysis of aggression in 1939," Jebb said, "who is going to believe Soviet theories of agression in 1950? The truth is that unless these mad deterministic ideas are abandoned, peace cannot be final and the possibility of war must always be there."

The Council adjourned until Friday.

Senate Lops Off 40 Millions in Rural Roads Funds

By The Associated Press

With economy advocates in the saddle, the Senate voted 47 to 37 yesterday to lop 40 million dollars off proposed rural roads funds in a two-year highway authorization bill.

Senator Byrd (D., Va.) sponsored an amendment to trim the amount back to 135 million dollars, the level of previous yearly outlays.

The Senate Public Works Committee previously had approved a 200 million dollar authorization but had agreed to trim this amount to 175 million dollars on President Truman's demand for economies in the highway funds.

The Byrd economy amendment was adopted after the Senate had slapped down, 54 to 26, a proposal by Senator Douglas (D., Ill.) to cut 100 million dollars off the 175 million dollars proposed authorization.

The measure authorizes $1,237,000,000 for Federal aid to highways and other road construction for a two-year period ending June 30, 1953.

Reserve Volunteers Called by Marines

The Marine Corps began yesterday to call enlisted men in the Volunteer Marine Corps Reserve from buck sergeants down for "extended active duty."

A limited number of officers in the volunteer reserve—most of them combat specailists with rank of captain down—can expect to be called shortly, a Marine source said.

The enlisted men—if they pass physicals—will be inducted to serve "in excess of 30 days."

No figures were available yesterday, but the corps announced on August 8 that there are 1000 Volunteer Reservists in the District area—80,000 in the Nation.

15 Days of Grace

Volunteer Reservists will have 15 days from the time they are notified until they are to report for physicals. An additional 15 days will be granted, if necessary.

Men in the Washington area will be sent to Parris Island, S. C., for training if they have not had prior Marine service. If they have served in the corps, they will be sent to Camp Lejeune, N. C., for further training.

Lieut. Col. V. W. Banning, who yesterday assumed duties as district director, said his office hopes to process 100 a day.

The calls for duty will follow a definite priority pattern: First to go in will be trained specialists; second will be trained reservists who have "no particular specialties;" last will be untrained reservists.

Specialists Listed

Specialists in these fields will be called up in this order:

1. Construction and equipment, 2. fire instrument control repairmen, 3. operational communications, 4. communication material, 5. electronics, 6. motor transport, 7. machine accounting, 8. aviation electronics, 9. air control.

The Army yesterday, meanwhile, announced that the Engineer Advance Replacement Training Center at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, will be reactivated today with the reopening of headquarters. The center had been inactive since November, 1946.

The first group—some 220 men—is due about September 14. New groups will arrive weekly thereafter, the announcement said.

The Army also announced that women doctors and dentists may apply for reserve commissions to be called to active duty.

Enlistments Continue

Enlistments in Washington yesterday continued in all branches of the Armed Service. The Marine Corps took six men, bringing the month's total to 27. Ten other men applied during the day but were rejected.

Six men enlisted in the Army yesterday; five in the Air Force. The Navy's day was five men enlisted; four Waves enlisted; two enlisted reservists accepted for active duty; 10 applications for the regular Navy, five accepted.

In nearby Maryland, Draft Board No. 56, Upper Marlboro, reported that three men will be inducted Thursday. They are Carroll S. Diven, 25, of 43 A st., Laurel; Andrew Henry Zipf, 25, of 7012 F st., Seat Pleasant, and Arthur T. Beal, 24, of Bowie. Board No. 55, Hyattsville, reported that John Robert Byron, 23, of 106 5th ave., Takoma Park, will be inducted August 29.

Washington Draft

District draft headquarters expect to make public today the date on which Washington's first crop of draftees will be inducted.

The date probably will be right after Labor Day, September 4.

These men will be the first of 252 to be inducted during September as the District's part of the 50,000 national quota.

Virginia already has announced its call-up for the northern part of the state. It follows:

September 19: 21 men from Arlington County; September 21: 19 men from Alexandria; September 28: 21 men from Fairfax County.

Senate Group Urges Early UMT Approval

of men for actual service in the armed forces.

Many, including a large number of military men, have questioned whether the draft and UMT can be operated simultaneously. Bradley said he believed it can be done, but did not indicate how.

"If a sufficient number do not volunteer to meet the needs of the services," said he, "some men of this age group must later be selected to serve in the regular forces, and must serve for a period long enough that they can be used on foreign service.

"While the greatest portion of trainees would be utilized only in a partial or full mobilization, a portion might be needed even in peacetime."

This marked a departure from prior suggestions as to the use of "umptees." The plan has called for their enrollment in a "National Security Training Corps"—not in the Army. Navy and Air Force—which would be under the direction of a presidential commission.

Youths 17 to 20 would receive six months' basic military training, after which they either take another six months' training or enroll in a reserve unit for longer periods of training. They would not actually serve with the armed forces while in training — at home or abroad — though they would be under direction of military men.

Bradley's statement yesterday means the Pentagon feels that some of the youths finishing their UMT periods would have to be drafted for regular service under present world conditions.

The Joint Chiefs' head also briefly noted three major points about the present UMT program which Senators undoubtedly will want to expand upon when he is cross-examined today or later:

1. If UMT is approved, "we must also have the necessary equipment on hand to make quick use of our trained manpower." This would mean a much heavier—and costlier — weapons procurement program than now projected.

2. The trainees "in this program" cannot be "counted as an immediate part of our forces available for combat" and must receive additional training before put under fire. Many military men believe that anything less than a year or two of UMT training is of little value.

3. While there will be valuable educational, citizenship and physical conditioning benefits of UMT, these must be considered "by-products." The "main purpose" of UMT which must be kept in mind and made preeminent, Bradley stressed is training men to be soldiers.

Here Bradley obviously was reflecting the fear of many military men that the training and discipline under UMT might become so watered down that it would not provide the toughened GIs required in modern war.

It was noticeable, also, that in his prepared statement Bradley indorsed only "some form of UMT" and not the specific bill before the committee.

"Even after the Korean situation is settled," he declared, "It appears that at best we may be faced for many years with tension in international affairs. To maintain sufficient regular forces to meet all emergencies quickly would be very expensive.

"With a reservoir of trained men, our National Guard and Reserve units could be made effective for combat much more quickly . . . Some form of UMT is the only satisfactory long-range answer."

During yesterday's hearing every Senator present spoke out strongly in favor of action on UMT now. Including both Democrats and Republicans, they were: Chairman Tydings (D., Md.), Byrd (D., Va.), Chapman (D., Ky.), Johnson (D., Tex.), Hunt (D., Wyo.), Gurney (R., S. D.), Morse (R., Oreg), Bridges (R., N H.), and Knowland (R., Calif.).

They agreed in substance with Secretary Johnson's statement that "there will be no security for America without UMT."

Wouldn't Recall Witnesses

Knowland, demanding that Congress stay in session to pass the bill, declared, "there is no recess for the troops in Korea."

Tydings declared that the committee had gone thoroughly into the subject in the Eightieth Congress, hearing "every segment of the population" pro and con. The current hearings, he said, are only a continuation of that investigation and therefore it will not be necessary to hear the witnesses whose testimony was taken then—some 300 of them.

The group will meet at 10:15 a. m. today to hear Johnson and Bradley on some proposed changes in the bill and will try to finish quickly, Tydings said.

"We want to make time," he added. "We don't want to be undemocratic but there's a war on."

Secretary Johnson told the Senators the training program could not be put into operation while the Korean fighting continues, but declared its passage would have a tremendous "psychological effect abroad" and would permit planning to go forward so that it could be started promptly when the Far East combat ends.

He suggested that the bill be amended to let the President start the program when he thinks it is possible to do so. Senator Gurney objected to this and Johnson agreed to work out language which would make its effective date more definite.

The committee also heard George N. Craig, national commander of the American Legion, strongly indorse the bill. A statement backing the measure submitted by Omar Ketchum, representing the Veterans of Foreign wars, also was read.

Agencies Seek 250,000 Jobs hour work week instead of the five-day, 40-hour week.

Navy's Bureau of Ships here is planning to add 600 civilians. In addition, $155,000 was requested for overtime pay, which means a longer work week is slated for some of its employes.

Many employes in Navy's Bureau of Supplies & Accounts also will be placed on a 6-day week. Rear Admiral C. W. Fox, bureau chief, is seeking $1,398,900 to pay overtime to employes on service-wide accounting and disbursing work. He informed the committee:

"Funds are required to support overtime work incident to operation on a 6-day work week by the staff currently on board. The change to a 6-day week is an immediate need because the workload factors are increasing at a rate faster than recruitment can be accomplished, and the 6-day week is expected to continue throughout the fiscal year."

The admiral also revealed that some of the departmental employes here would be placed on a 6-day week.

The Navy also asked for $213,000 to pay overtime to "certain employes" in the executive office of the Navy Secretary. The committee was told that compensatory time off to offset overtime hours is no longer feasible.

There can be no question about it now, more and more civilians in the military agencies will be placed on a longer work-week and be paid overtime for all work over 40 hours.

Preference for the many new jobs, the committee was told, will go first to former employes and next to those who are on Civil Service eligible registers. The Navy had to lay off 88,000 civilians during the past year under Defense Secretary Johnson's so-called economy program.

German Socialists Spurn Army Proposal

Bonn, Aug. 22 (AP).—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer failed today in an effort to line up Socialist support for his proposal that West Germany be allowed an armed defense force of about 65,000 men.

Socialist Leader Kurt Schumacher and the chancellor talked privately nearly three hours. Adenauer holds that the West German republic needs such a force to counterbalance the heavily armed Communist "people's police" of East Germany.

Schumacher was asked by a reporter after the meeting:

"Is the viewpoint of the social Democratic (Socialist) Party changed as a result of your meeting with the chancellor?"

Schumacher replied with an emphatic "No."

Adenauer made his proposal for a defense force in a newspaper interview last week, without prior consultation with his Conservative Cabinet or his parliamentary opposition. The Socialists are the strongest of the opposition.

Qualified diplomatic informants reported in London today that Adenauer has asked the West for permission to organize quickly a police-army of around 65,000 men. Under the plan the United States would supply the arms. The strength of the Communist people's police of East Germany is variously estimated from 53,000 to 300,000.

Adenaur has also called for a big buildup of Allied occupation forces in West Germany which, he said, should include at least 10 American armored divisions. He argued that these measures would hold off the chance of Germany becoming another Korea.

A British Foreign Office spokesman told reporters Adenauer's call for a West German defense force will have to be decided upon by the United States, British and French foreign ministers when they meet in New York September 12.

East Germans Start Drive Against West

Berlin, Aug. 22 (AP).—East Germany blew the whistle tonight for a new drive to spread communism west to the Rhine River.

The Russian zone's Communist leaders summoned a so-called national congress to meet here Friday and rubberstamp a campaign designed to:

1. Undermine the prestige of the American, British and French occupation forces in West Germany and West Berlin.
2. Sabotage the legally elected anti-Communist republic of West Germany, seated at Bonn on the Rhine.
3. Persuade West German businessmen to turn east for their future.

Pact Group Studies Cost Of Arming

London, Aug. 22 (AP). — The North Atlantic Pact's civilian directors resumed work today on strengthening of the West's defenses against the possibility of aggression from the East. They were fresh from talks with their home governments. Charles M. Spofford of the United States presided over the talks of the Council of Deputies.

The dollar-and-cents aspect of the deputies' discussions revolved around questions like these:

Just how is Western rearmament to be paid for?

Just what help is the United States, as the richest and strongest member of the 12-nation partnership, going to give each of its allies?

The nub of the American complaint seems to be that some European nations, such as Britain and France, are counting too much on the United States for money and material help; that they are not sacrificing enough in the common cause of containing communism, and that there's too much of a "business as usual" air about the whole European approach.

The defense programs projected by the main European members of the pact stands as follows:

Britain proposes to spend $9,520,000,000 over the next three years. This represents an increase of something like $2,800,000,000 over her pre-Korea program. She wants the United States to provide help for about half the proposed increase—around $1,400,000,000. This country has about five million men already trained or in training and so feels she can help best by producing arms.

France suggests putting an additional 15 divisions in the field within three years at a cost of $5,600,000,000 more than she is spending on defense now. The French note their effort depends on America and Britain sending a minimum of about six divisions each to the continent right away.

The Netherlands is planning to raise an extra three divisions and to boost military production.

Belgium is thinking of stepping up her defense budget of around 270 million dollars by more than a third.

Denmark hopes to increase her 50-million-dollar defense bill.

inevitable and thereby writing off the chances of peace."

2. It must maintain an adequate defense posture, and if necessary maintain it over a long period of time.
3. It must give its friends the impression that Americans are a determined people and reliable allies. But at the same time, it must impress on them that their interest is as strong as ours in the achievement of a more stable and happier world.
4. We must keep our flag flying at home and so demonstrate that we are making a success of our national life—that we are getting along with our problems. We must see to it that other peoples understand what we are doing.

Avoid Hasty Judgments

Kennan said that, beyond that, Americans had to be very careful to "avoid hasty and emotional judgments" as the Nation enters an area where political and military considerations are closely intermingled.

"We must deal with these problems cooly and carefully," he said, "realizing that we are now, for the first time as a Nation, facing the tests of maturity and world leadership.

"I still believe that the actions of the Kremlin, which have caused such great concern, are based on a misestimation on their part of the world they live in and a tragic failure to realize that international progress can never be made on the basis of hostility and antagonism and can only be made on the basis of freedom of association of peoples and the principle of live and let live."

Kennan entered the Foreign Service 25 years ago, and, along with Charles (Chip) Bohlen and others, was sent to Berlin to make a study of Russia, her language, history and geography. Later he continued his studies in the field at the American Legation in Riga.

He was in the American Embassy in Moscow from 1933 to 1937, in Prague at the time of the Munich Pact, and in Berlin when World War II began in 1939. When the United States got into the war, he was interned by the Germans for five months.

He returned to Moscow in 1944 and remained for two years. In 1947 the then Secretary of State George C. Marshall made Kennan head of a new Policy Planning Commission, a post in which he became a sort of "diplomatic chief of staff" and "global planner." More recently he has served as counselor of the department.

D. C. Food Prices Near Record in July

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Retail food prices in Washington went up 1.4 percent from June 15 to July 15, to the highest level since October, 1948, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last night.

All major groups, except dairy products, showed an increase. Prices were higher for 27 different foods, lower for 18. No change was shown for five.

The Washington price index on July 15 was 207 (the average price for 1935-39 equaling 100). This was 3.3 percent above a year ago. It was 3.9 percent under the record high prices of June, 1948. It was 42.3 percent higher than in June, 1938, the last month of the wartime OPA.

The rise in the cost of food in Washington was considerably smaller than the 2.6 percent average for the entire country. This jump in food costs was chiefly responsible for a Nation-wide rise in the cost of living of 1.4 percent from June 15 to July 15.

On July 15 the United States average Consumer's Price Index stood at 172.5 percent of the 1935-39 average. This was 2.4 percent 1.1 percent below the all-time above last year's level and only high reached in the late summer of 1948. All cities registered increases, ranging from 0.9 percent to 2.7 percent in Birmingham.

The national increase was enough to give 335,000 General Motors workers a five-cent hourly wage boost. General Motors, under a five-year contract signed last Spring, raises the hourly rate or lowers it every three months a cent for every 1.14 percentage point change in the BLS Index. Since April 15 the Cost of Living Index has gone up 5.2 percent.

The BLS report for the entire United States, however, indicates that prices have gone down since July 15.

"Between July 15 and July 31," BLS reported, "a special survey revealed that sharp seasonal declines in retail prices of fresh vegetables and lower prices for fresh pork more than offset increases reported for most other foods. It was estimated that food prices on July 31 were slightly lower on the average than the July 15 prices, even though a number of products, among them bread and coffee, reached new records highs by the end of the month."

The report then went on to remark that a "preliminary tabulation" for the week of August 14 "indicates that retail food prices declined slightly from mid-July to mid-August."

In Washington, BLS reported, between June 15 and July 15 "meats, poultry and fish prices moved up 1.9 percent to the highest level since November, 1948. Beef and veal advanced 1.5 percent, with some cuts rising from 2 to 3 percent, except for rib roast, which declined 1 percent. Pork prices advanced 4.3 percent, as lard went up 7.5 percent and other items from 1 to 4 percent. Chicken prices rose 6 percent. Prices of lamb and fish declined fractionally.

Egg Prices Rise

Egg prices in Washington rose seasonally by 12.6 percent, BLS said. "Coffee prices increased 5.3 percent following a three-month decline, and are now only 1 percent below the record high of March, 1950. Prices of fats and oils averaged 3 percent higher, with increases for all items in the group."

Fresh fruits and vegetables went up slightly in Washington, BLS said, offsetting decreases for dried and canned goods. The largest increases were for oranges, up 19 percent, green beans, up 13 percent, and apples, up 7 percent. On the other hand, cabbages went down 10 percent, potatoes 11 percent, canned peas, 11 percent and lettuce 10 percent.

Sugar and cereals and bakery products rose slightly in Washington, and bread and corn meal jumped about 1.5 percent. Butter and cheese was down slightly.

Hill Unit Asks Justice Probe Of Coffee Price

The Senate Agriculture Committee unanimously adopted yesterday a report calling on the Justice Department to investigate sales and storage practices here of foreign interests dealing with coffee.

Soaring consumer prices of the commodity prompted the Senate inquiry into the subject.

The report is a toned-down version of an earlier statement issued by an Agriculture subcommittee headed by Senator Gillette (D., Iowa), which had provoked criticism from the State Department because of references to various Latin-American countries.

Stricken from the new version are the more pointed references to foreign interests, intimating conspiracy in holding coffee off the market in order to drive up prices.

The new report was prepared by a subcommittee headed by Senator Ellender (D., La.). He told reporters State Department authorities who have read the new report find it less objectionable, but still do not approve of it and wish that the committee take no action at all.

The recommendations call on the Attorney General to investigate the sales and storage practices of the National Federation of Coffee Growers of Colombia and other foreign interests and "take any appropriate action under the anti-trust laws."

As in the original Gillette subcommittee report, the new document points out that while no one cause can be given for the coffee price increase, contributing factors are decreased production due to weather conditions and increased demand both here and in Europe.

Wholesale Coffee Prices Up 2-3 Cents

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Several large coffee roasting firms have raised their wholesale prices for vacuum packed brands of coffee by two to three cents a pound blaming the rising cost of green coffee.

House Passes Bill to Pay Freight on Free Foods

By the United Press

The House passed a bill yesterday to permit the Government to pay freight costs on surplus foods it is forced to give away to prevent spoilage.

The measure, which now goes to the Senate, was approved by voice vote after being amended to bar the use of such surpluses to feed Communists or "otherwise aid communism."

The authority was requested by the Agriculture Department to help it get rid of huge surpluses of butter, cheese, dried eggs, milk and other perishable foods bought to keep farm prices high.

The Department now has authority to give such foods to organized charity, provided the agencies pay shipping costs. Officials said the organizations were reluctant to take the food on such conditions.

Under the bill, the Government could pay freight on food shipped from central storage points to relief distribution points or to ports from which it would be sent overseas.

State agencies would pay for local distribution and no money was provided to send the food outside the United States. The bill would permit the Government to pay for repackaging bulk surpluses in consumer-size containers.

While Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan estimated it would cost 44 million dollars to package and ship all the surpluses now on hand, the actual cost is expected to run much lower.

If other food prices continued to rise, the Government may be able to sell more of its surpluses, making it unnecessary to give them away.

Rail Strikers Pledge No Extension 'Now'

By The Associated Press

Union officials last night announced a moratorium "for the time being" on further rail strikes after a new series of White House talks had failed to reach a settlement.

A union spokesman told newsmen he was speaking for both the trainmen's and conductors' unions in declaring:

"Out of consideration for the President, and respect for him, extension of the strikes to other yards and terminals or beyond that have for the time being been held in abeyance."

But the spokesman would not predict how long the pledge against the spread of strikes would hold.

Some union officials earlier had hinted at a major expansion of the present five-day "token" walkouts if a quick settlement of the 17-month-old dispute was not reached.

However, the union spokesman indicated that any such action had been thrown overboard following a new round of White House conferences.

Day's Second Parley Called

Late yesterday afternoon, the White House had again summoned union and management officials for the second time during the day, but once more the announcement was "no progress."

Both sides were told to stand by for further discussions, probably today.

Union officials said President had not specifically requested the moratorium, although he had previously asked the unions to call off the walkouts.

More than 44,000 rail and steel workers had already been made idle by the strikes on two defense area rail lines and three key terminals.

In Canada, the Dominion underwent its first nation-wide rail strike in history as more than 124,000 railway employes walked out in a wage-hour dispute parallelling the controversy in the United States.

American publishers were warned that a prolonged Canadian strike would hit the newsprint supplies of American newspapers. Some 80 percent of United States newsprint comes from Canada.

However, most daily newspapers in this country were reported to have an average 40-day supply on hand at the end of July.

In Washington, Postmaster General Donaldson ordered sharp restriction on postal service to Canada because of the strike there. Only first-class letters, postcards and emergency parcels will be accepted for delivery to Canada.

The new White House conferences, personally ordered by President Truman, ended in a stalemate after Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman spent 2½ hours trying to bring union and management officials together. They met in separate rooms at the White House.

The unions twice have asked Mr. Truman to take over the railroads to avert a serious stoppage of rail transportation, but so far have limited their strategy to walkouts on short-line railroads and terminals.

Under a World War I act of 1916, the President has the power to do so.

The short-line strikes in the Pittsburgh and Chicago areas began at 6 a. m. yesterday; those at the terminals in Louisville, Cleveland and Minneapolis-St. Paul began Monday. Both are for five-day periods.

Union leaders are demanding a 40-hour week with no loss in pay from their present 48-hour paychecks, along with other adjustments in conditions.

Union terms for settlement are equivalent to a 31-cent hourly increase. The railroads have raised their offer to 23 cents, after first standing firm on an 18-cent award proposed by a presidential emergency board.

Labor Saved From Full Impact of Taft-Hartley by Prosperity, Tobin Tells ITU Meeting Here

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Continuing prosperity has saved labor from the "full impact" of the Taft-Hartley Law, Secretary of Labor Tobin reminded printers in assembly here yesterday.

Carrying President Truman's greetings to some 400 delegates to the ninety-second annual convention of the International Typographical Union, Tobin expressed the hope that the labor law can be changed.

"It is our hope," he declared, "that sometime in the future—the near future—we may be able to substitute for the Taft-Hartley Law a just labor-management law which will be both fair to labor and to management."

But even with the law that has been in operation since August, 1947, labor unions have held their own, with no noticeable decline in membership, Tobin said.

Where the law may be hurting labor most, he pointed out, is in unionizing workers not already banded together before the Taft-Hartley law went into effect. He mentioned the textile industry, where, he said, some 60 percent of the workers are unorganized.

The Labor Secretary also attacked critics of the Administration's foreign policy against the spread of communism. Under President Truman, he said, communism in the world "has been successfully contained for the past four years." The Korean conflict, he said, is the only exception.

The Labor Secretary spoke by invitation at yesterday's business sessions of the powerful labor union which numbers 90,000 members.

Earlier, the delegates had voted down a proposal that union laws be changed to permit printers to refuse overtime work, and voted for another proposal to eliminate Social Security age limitations as a model for retirement.

The overtime policy change was proposed by the New York delegation to the convention as admittedly "New York's attempt to remedy a local condition."

New York printers, said the delegates proposing the change, "are piling up a mass of overtime, against their wishes."

Despite the pleas, the body of delegates rejected the motion, sustaining its laws committee recommendation.

In rejecting past obligations of contract negotiators to base retirement plans on age limitations set up by the National Social Security Act, the delegates gave their negotiators freer range.

Democrats Seek To Avoid Veto Of Security Bill

President Truman is still undecided whether to sign or veto the Social Security expansion bill because of strong objections to the so-called Knowland rider.

This was reliably learned as leading Capitol Democrats, stirred up by reports of a possible veto, strenuously recommended that the President sign the bill.

One Senate Administration spokesman said word has been forwarded to the White House that a veto would either have the effect of killing the legislation for this session, or a congressional override clinching the Knowland amendment in the law.

At least one prominent House Democratic opponent to the amendment has urged the White House to sign the bill, and at the same time to issue a statement blasting the Knowland restriction and calling for its repeal.

Secretary's Power Curbed

The controversial amendment, added to the bill in the Senate and retained in conference, curbs the power of the Secretary of Labor to hold up unemployment insurance funds for a State whose jobless insurance system fails to meet basic minimum Federal standards.

Under the amendment, strongly opposed by organized labor, the Secretary could not enforce his ruling until it had been appealed through the various State courts to the highest court in the State.

Conending the rider undermined the original unemployment insurance law, and any semblance of Federal standards, Administration forces at the President's request tried and failed to eliminate the rider in a close House vote.

During the House tussle, Representatives Walter A. Lynch (D., N. Y.) and John D. Dingell (D., Mich.) charged the rider could force jobless persons to become strikebreakers in order to obtain work.

CIO-PAC Hits Measure

The CIO Political Action Committee similarly charged the amendment "would permit State employment compensation officials to require unemployed people to take jobs at substandard wages or struck jobs.

"If they did not take these jobs they would forfeit their unemployment insurance," the CIO added.

A bill to repeal the amendment was introduced by Dingell immediately following the House vote. The President's Capitol advisers are now urging him to try this repeal route rather than jeopardize enactment of the greatly liberalized social security benefits by a veto.

100,000 See Funeral of Murdered Belgian Red Chieftain

Seraing, Belgium, Aug. 22 (U.P.).—Julien Lahaut, assassinated Belgium Communist Party chairman, was buried here today as Communists cried for revenge and 300,000 workers dropped their tools in mourning.

It was one of the largest funerals in Belgian history. Observers said it was surpassed only by those of King Albert and Queen Astrid, first wife of King Leopold III.

Some 100,000 persons lined the streets of this dingy industrial suburb of Liege to watch the funeral cortege climb a steep 2-mile hill to the cemetery from local Communist headquarters.

Communists from all over western Europe assembled for the ceremony and rubbed shoulders with government representatives and Soviet Embassy officials.

As services began at 3 p. m., more than 300,000 workers throughout Belgium's southern industrial belt laid down their tools and stepped back from their machines for 30 minutes.

Iron, steel and coal industries were mainly affected, but street cars and trolley buses also stopped, forcing thousands to make their way to Seraing by bus, automobile, bicycle and foot.

Revenge was the theme of the funeral ceremony outside the bedecked local party headquarters.

"Workers, by your actions avenge Comrade Lahaut," shouted Communist Secretary-General Edgar Lalmand, who says he has been warned he is next on the "assassination list."

Lalmand's shout was echoed throughout the square by massed thousands who raised their fists in the Communist salute.

Ministry of Justice officials in Brussels, meanwhile, revealed that two men have been under arrest since Sunday in connection with the killing of Lahaut last Friday.

Most important foreign Communist official present at the funeral was Harry Pollitt, secretary-general of the British Communist Party.

Baltimore, Aug. 22 (AP).—Governor Lane announced today that bids on 19 new buildings at the State's mental hospital will be opened September 14.

They are part of the overhaul program voted for the mental hospital system by the 1949 General Assembly and wil cost about $4,800,000.

More Red Korea Type Actions Questioned

Is Stalin planning Korea-like aggressions in many parts of the globe, with the idea of having his puppet armies "bleed us white" while his own Red Army remains intact?

This theory, a popular one with some politicians, commentators and taproom strategists, is challenged here by those who have studied the situation. They think Stalin would like to use puppets, while keeping his own troops idle, but point out that his opportunities are limited.

Korea Different

Korea, they say, is in a class by itself, in that North Korea is the only satellite with a puppet army that does not have a treaty of alliance with Russia. Thus, technically at least, Stalin could order North Korea to go to war without obligating himself to join in if things didn't go right.

According to those who ought to know something about the matter, Stalin didn't pull the trigger in Korea with the idea of weakening the United States, but rather with the idea of strengthening Russia. They don't believe that Stalin expected the United States to intervene in Korea in the way it did.

Russia's fear of Japan, her traditional enemy, lay behind the decision to take over the whole Korean peninsula, according to this view. Japan is the only country in Asia outside of Russia herself that can produce the sinews of war, and the only one that can deliver a punch beyond her own frontiers.

In the aftermath of World War II, Russia hoped not only to take over all of Korea, but to have a lot to say about Japan so that she could keep the Japanese amenable and disarmed. However, two things happened to upset her calculations.

First, the United States insisted on staying in South Korea below the Thirty-eighth Parallel longer than the Russians had expected, and, secondly, there was an unlooked-for delay in a Japanese peace treaty.

Why Stalin decided to order the Communist attack in Korea in June may never be known, but those who have studied the situation suggest this as one possible reason—that he thought if he didn't do it promptly the United States might arm the Japanese.

If this was the case, the outcome has gone altogether contrary to Stalin's thinking. It seems a good bet now that the United States will arm the Japanese, whatever its intentions were before. Not only that, but the United States itself is now launched on a major arms-expansion program, thanks to the Korean explosion.

American intervention in Korea, which apparently surprised the Russians, is believed to have had a sobering effect on the Kremlin.

What are other possible areas of trouble?

Iran has been suggested as one. It is pointed out, however, that Iran is altogether different from Korea. There are Iranian Communists, but not nearly enough to make up a real fighting force as in Korea.

Red China Different

Communist China is also different from Korea. Stalin can't just press a button and send Chinese Communists into action. He has to deal with Mao Tze-tung, the Chinese Communist leader, a shrewd fellow, who has to know what's in it for China.

The Balkan countries provide the nearest comparison to Korea. Stalin might or might not send the armies of these Balkan satellites into action. If he did, however, it would not be possible for him to disclaim responsibility as he has done in the case of Korea. Hungary and Rumania, for example, constitute Russia's line of communications to Germany and Austria, so that the Red army might be said to be sitting on them.

East Germany also presents difficulties. Here Russia is building up a formidable army, but she could hardly use them before the Red army moves out.

The Russian goal, according to students of the situation, seems to be what it has long been—a maximum of power with a minimum of responsibility.

U. N. Mediator Quits Peace Try in Kashmir

Karachi, Pakistan, Aug. 22 (U.P.).—United Nations Mediator Sir Owen Dixon admitted failure tonight in his attempts to settle the three-year-old Kashmir dispute and blamed both India and Pakistan.

Despite the failure, he said, "I am unwilling to suppose that after all the examination the problem received, the governments will be unable to resolve it by negotiation."

Dixon said he would leave by plane for Lake Success Wednesday because no purpose could be served by his remaining here any longer.

Dixon held discussions with Indian Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan in New Delhi and Karachi.

Fishpond Tale

Boy, 3, Saves Pal, 2, From Drowning

ALOIS
. . . young hero

A 2½-year-old Arlington boy who fell in a backyard fishing pond Monday owes his life to husky 3-year-old Alois Burta 3d, of 1304 N. Pierce st., Arlington.

The young hero, who weighs 50 pounds although he won't be 4 until November, fished his younger playmate, Mark Simonovich, from 4 feet of water behind Mark's home at 1610 Lee blvd.

Alois' mother, Mrs. Madeline Burta, told Arlington County police she heard Mark scream as she stood in the bedroom of her apartment. She leaned out the window to see her own child holding on to the younger boy's hand as he floundered in the pool.

"I heard my little boy call, 'Momma, Momma,' but by the time I got there he had pulled the child out."

Mark's mother, Mrs. Louis Simonovich, who works at the Pentagon, was surprised to learn yesterday from a reporter of her son's rescue. After checking with older children in the family by telephone she said, "They didn't think it was important enough to tell me."

Mrs. Burta said the open fish pond on her neighbor's lot "just scares me to death, because there are a lot of tots around."

New Atom Pile For Peace Use Is Started Up

Upton, N. Y., Aug. 22 (U.P.). — An atomic furnace was ignited today and the production of invisible bullets that set off atom bombs was begun.

The atomic furnace, known as a reactor in scientific language, is the Nation's mot powerful, and probably the most powerful in the world.

Its main purpose is to produce neutrons, particles that are in the core of the atom and have no electrical charge, thus the name neutron. While another particle known as the proton they make up the nucleus, or core, of the atom.

The United States Atomic Energy Commission, which announced the start of the new atomic furnace or pile, said the furnace is for research only, and not for production of atom bomb materials.

To ignite an atomic pile a certain "critical size" of uranium must be reached. At 2:30 a. m. today, Dr. Lyle B. Borst, director of the pile, signaled the removal of control rods—rods that had been placed within the pile to absorb neutrons. With the rods removed the neutrons being emitted from uranium atoms, struck other uranium atoms, setting up a chain reaction.

The reaction in the case of an atomic pile is controlled, and the intensity of the furnace can be regulated through use of the control rods. In an atomic bomb, there is no such controlled reaction, the bomb blowing up in a fraction of a second.

The pile here is "blow up" proof, the scientists say, and even if it did get out of control, there would be no explosion like an atomic bomb.

The pile is on the grounds of the National Brookhaven Laboratory, which is operated for the commission by a group of East universities. The purpose of the Brookhaven reactor is to produce neutrons for scientific experimentation, the commission said.

The Brookhaven pile is the sixth research atomic furnace started by this country. Canada has one, Britain two, and France one. Russia, too, may have one or more.

Reps. Kilburn, Heller Renominated in N. Y.

By The Associated Press

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 22 (AP).—Two New York Congressmen, a Democrat and a Republican, beat off challengers to win renomination today in State primary fights.

Republican Representative Clarence E. Kilburn of Malone emerged with an easy victory in the upstate Thirty-fourth Congressional District. Democratic Representative Louis B. Heller beat a challenger in Brooklyn's Seventh District.

In upstate New York, veteran GOP Representative W. Sterling Cole of Bath took a narrow lead in his primary fight with John Young for the Republican nomination in the Thirty-ninth Congressional District.

Cole is his party's third ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee.

Another Republican incumbent, Representative Edwin A. Hall of Binghampton (Thirtyseventh), and Democratic Representative Joseph L. Pfeifer of the Eighth District in Brooklyn, also faced foes.

There were five other intraparty congressional contests—none involving incumbents. Forty-five House seats in all were involved.

Voting figures were meager at a late hour. Tabulation was slow, since paper ballots rather than voting machines were used in the election.

Winsted and Williams Leading in Mississippi

Representative Arthur Winstead, whose four opponents criticized his stand against economic aid to Korea, edged into a lead on first returns from Mississippi's Democratic primary last night.

In the first 23 of 329 precincts from the Fifth Congressional District, Winstead had 1625 votes. Former Representative Ross Collins had 350, J. O. Hollis, 323; O. D. Brame, 211, and Robert T. Mason, 27.

Representative John Bell Williams was far ahead in the seventh Mississippi district. He had 4201 votes in 83 of 329 precincts to 285 for Davage Smith.

Vowed Revenge

Moving Rock Recalls Old Indian Curse

Aylmer, Quebec, Aug. 22 (U.P.).—A 2000-cubic-foot rock used by the Indians as an execution block is moving slowly toward the Ottawa River.

Is the rock being "pushed" by nature or is the spirit of a dead Indian finally claiming his revenge?

Some here swear the spirit of "Strong Oak," who was dashed to death on the stone, is causing the big round boulder to creep toward the river. Others ascribe it to a natural shifting of the terrain.

The boulder has moved 14 inches toward the river this year. It is now 100 feet from its original position 100 years ago.

The stone has a bloody history. It once was used as an execution block by the Algonquins. Braves found guilty of breaking tribal laws were trussed and hauled to a crude platform in a tree 12 feet above the rock.

The condemned man then was weighted with rocks so that he'd land headfirst, and pushed off

"Strong Oak" was said to have been killed for proposing that the Algonquins fight the Iroquois with tomahawks and arrows instead of the witch doctor's black magic.

He predicted before his death that his spirit would return and push the death rock into the river. When the rock struck the river, he declared, the spirits of all dead Indians would be released to reclaim their heritage.

Martin Asserts America Builds 'Fantastic' Arms

Johnstown, Pa., Aug. 22 (AP).—Aircraft builder Glenn L. Martin today declared the United States is building "fantastic" new weapons capable of overcoming an enemy who has a 20-to-1 numerical superiority.

Martin said his firm is building four types of homing device missiles which he likened to bird dogs.

"Just give one of those machines the scent and it will track its game better than an animal," the plane builder declared.

Martin said his huge aircraft plant will be on a full war footing by November.

The Gallup Poll

Public Backs Paying For War by Taxation

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 22.—President Truman's determination to pay for the Korean war as much as possible through taxation rather than borrowing has the support of the general public at this time, judging by the results of an opinion survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

While nobody enjoys paying taxes, the public votes 3-to-1 in this survey in favor of meeting the increased cost of defense chiefly by extra taxes instead of chiefly by deficit financing, as was the case in World War II.

Moreover, a majority of the voters questioned, representing a scientifically selected cross-section of the whole adult population, say they would be willing to see Federal income taxes increased immediately to pay for the war in Korea and to re-arm the Nation.

Once before, in the early days of World War II, Institute surveys found this same reaction. In fact, in 1941 and 1942 the public was willing to pay much more in taxes than either Congress or the Treasury Department had asked, demonstrating again the capacity of the people to be a jump ahead of their government.

Two questions were put to voters in today's study. The first was as follows:

"How should the Federal Government pay the increased cost of defense—CHIEFLY by extra taxes, or CHIEFLY by borrowing more money?"

The vote:

Taxes	60%
Borrowing	19
No opinion	21
	100%

The second question was:

"Some people say Federal income taxes must be increased immediately to pay for the present war in Korea and to re-arm the United States. Do you agree or disagree?"

The results:

Agree	51%
Disagree	29
No opinion	20
	100%

60% by Taxes

In World War II, it is estimated, the United States paid about 45 percent of its war costs out of taxation, the rest by borrowing.

Administration officials say that if there is a third world war we should pay at least 60 percent out of taxes and preferably 70 to 75 percent—which would, of course, mean very much higher taxes than we had in the last war.

Although Republican voters questioned in today's survey voted virtually the same as Democrats in favor of paying for the war by taxes rather than by borrowing, the Republicans see less need for boosting Federal income taxes immediately.

Here is the party vote on that issue:

INCREASE INCOME TAXES IMMEDIATELY?

	Republicans	Democrats	Independents
Agree	48%	54%	48%
Disagree	34	25	30
No opinion	18	21	22
	100%	100%	100%

'Seoul City Sue' Gets Message From GI Radio

Tokyo, Aug. 22 (U.P.)—North Korean Radio's "Seoul City Sue" got a message from a GI last night.

The Communists' feminine broadcaster listens to the Armed Forces Radio broadcasts from Tokyo and sometimes comments on the program. She has reported on her own program, directed at American troops in Korea, that she listens to Sergt. Rollie Rowland's sports broadcast.

"And now here is a special message for Seoul City Sue," Rowland said last night, as he gave a long, loud Bronx cheer:

"Phfffttt!"

Norway Thanked for Aid

Secretary of State Acheson thanked the Norwegian government yesterday for the "outstanding services" of a Norwegian freighter in evacuating 650 American women and children from Korea shortly after the Communist invasion.

Ex-Truman Aide Cited In Sugar Deal 'Fix' said sadly, "he kept it a secret."

At first Lubben couldn't remember Messall's name, but a letter recalled it to him. Then as Messall was called to the stand, Lubben said he recognized him. But Messall, a natty man in a tweed jacket, said he didn't honestly remember ever having seen Lubben before. He said he had represented some 150 firms in the past nine years.

"You may have talked to me," Messall testified, as he stood facing Lubben, who also was standing a few rows away, "but you didn't give me a fee... I never received a fee for any OPA sugar deal that I remember."

. . . didn't remember

Then committee counsel Rudolph Halley read the letter, signed by Messell and addressed to a Lieut. Frank G. Harris, beginning "Dear Frank." Dated August 24, 1945, it referred to Messall's efforts to obtain from the Commodity Credit Corporation an additional corn syrup allowance for Eatsum Food Products Co., the Lubben firm.

Harris, Lubben testified, was the man who took him to see Messall.

The public relations man was asked by Chairman Kefauver (D., Tenn.) if he "bragged" of his former relationship with the President in his business. He replied:

'I don't advertise the fact but I'm proud of it."

Campaign Manager

He said that in addition to being Mr. Truman's secretary for six years he managed his senatorial reelection campaign in 1940.

Lubben also testified he had paid another Washington man to help him get a sugar quota. When asked who, the man himself—attorney Frank S. Ketcham—stood up at the press table where he had been sitting.

Ketcham, whose office is at 2000 Massachusetts are. nw., said he had advised Lubben over a period of six to eight months that he could not obtain additional sugar quotas. He said he received a $2500 fee and had billed Lubben for another $500 which he never received.

Lubben summed up his experience with those he paid to try and obtain sugar quotas by saying they always seemed to "know a man who knows a man who knows Harry Truman or someone like that."

Lubben's story of his Eatsum firm went like this:

He bought sugar in the black market to keep the company in business since he was a newcomer and not entitled to a sizeable quota on his past business. He paid one man whom he identified only as "Goldberg" $10,000 to help him get a quota but nothing happened.

Then he tried Messall and Ketcham, still with no results.

More "Connections"

Next he met Louis J. Roth, a New York accountant, who, Lubben said, told him he was connected with a big doughnut company and who bragged he could get him lots of sugar because he had "connections."

At this, Roth jumped up from his seat in the Senate Committee room and shouted that Lubben's testimony was "a bunch of lies."

But Lubben went on to say that he gave half his business to Roth and William J. Giglio for $35,000 and their "connections" to obtain sugar. Lubben added bitterly:

"But I never got enough sugar to sweeten your coffee."

Several other men also turned out to be "partners" as a result of the deal, including Frank Loperfido. Because the firm was sending big batches of cash to the mid-West to pay grain elevators black market prices for corn to be turned into corn syrup, lots of cash was kept in a cash box under Loperfido's control. The last time he saw the box it had $140,000 in it, Lubben said.

He said that in the nine months period in 1945 when he was in business with the "hoodlums" he saw at least $410,000 in cash go into the box. The Bureau of Internal Revenue is now investigating this matter in connection with several income tax cases.

Finally, Lubben said, he decided to get out. But to do so he had to turn over to his partners some $200,000 in the bank account, an inventory worth over $300,000, accounts receivable of another $300,000 and the $140,000 cash. Giglio claimed there was no money in the box—it had all gone to take care of "OPA trouble," Lubben testified.

Tobey's Lament

At this point Senator Tobey (R., N. H.) said Lubben was making him "kind of sorry I voted for price controls" in the Senate the previous day.

The partner agreed to pay Lubben's income tax to cover the partnership period but they failed to do so, he said. Finally he turned over to the income tax people a copy of the sales agreement and that "blew this whole thing up."

Another witness, Frank Livorsi, a former convict with a narcotics record, testified he drew $1000 a week from the candy firm and $35,000 in profits. He said he now lives on "what I win and lose" at the race tracks. Tobey called him a "parasite." He is having income tax troubles at present.

Livorsi said he knew Frank Costello, the New York gambling figure, but not well. Lubben said Roth once told him Costello was the "real boss," but Roth denied any such statement.

(In New York yesterday, Costello's attorney confirmed a story that Costello had sold a 13-story office building at 79 Wall st. and two nearby buildings. The New York Post said he sold them for $415,000, making a $100,000 profit.)

At one point Lubben said he twice paid Roth $7500 to get the Treasury's Alcohol Tax Unit "off my neck." On other occasions, he testified, Roth "called off" inquisitive OPA men.

FBI Probes Threat Against Rockwell Kent

Ausable Forks, N. Y., Aug. 22 (U.P.).—The FBI today investigated a death threat against Rockwell Kent, left-wing artist who recently was denied a passport to attend a peace conference in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Kent, an ALP candidate for Congress in 1948, received the printed threat on a penny postcard mailed Saturday in this rural Adirondack community.

bile firm, was identified by the lieutenant as the man who made the original complaint of wire tapping to Maj. Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police.

Nolan is in the auto finance business here. He has been a witness in the Pepper executive sessions. He has been described by witnesses other than Shimon as the man who at one time was Shimon's best friend. According to information given the committee, Nolan has identified himself as having had a conviction in the '30s for bribery here. One-time head of one of the city's largest auto firms, Nolan also was acquitted of fraud charges filed after the bankruptcy of his company.

Shimon was understood to have told the committee he heard directly from Major Barrett last year that Nolan was one of three persons who figured in the making of the wire tapping complaint. The other two were said to have been listed as Pvt. John McHale, former aide to Shimon, who resented the way Shimon in 1947 denied him leave and put him to listening in on Hughes' conversations, and Daniel B. Maher, assistant corporation counsel, who resigned this year after serving for the Commissioners as ace trouble-shooter in police matters.

Shimon's reported story was that he heard from Barrett that Nolan had come to Barrett and declared Shimon had been the chief instigator of United States Attorney George Morris Fay's special Grand Jury probe of gambling here, and further that Shimon had been wire tapping to get information on gambling violations.

Pepper quoted Shimon as telling the committee both parts of Nolan's report were untrue—that Shimon instigated the gambling probe here, or wiretapped in gambling investigations.

Nolan would not comment.

Major Barrett told The Washington Post Nolan called him in 1948, a full year before the Police probe of wire tapping began, to tell about Shimon. Barrett would not say what Nolan said, adding: "I only talked to him for a few minutes. I believed he was trying to start trouble."

It has been learned Shimon met with Barrett at Colonial Beach, Va., where Barrett has a vacation place, around the time Shimon was withdrawn from assignment as special investigator for the District Attorney. The shift followed police investigation of the wire-tapping complaints. Shimon's report to the Pepper group placed the meeting with Barrett, where Nolan's role in the wire-tapping complaint was told, at Colonial Beach.

In another development, Senator Brewster declined comment on Pepper's indicating to reporters that the committee might invite Brewster to tell about paying expense money to Shimon for trailing Lappin in 1947.

Pepper said the committee's next meeting will be an open hearing at 11 a. m. Friday to receive in public testimony previously given in private by three policemen, former aides of Shimon when he was investigator for the district attorney. They are Detective Sergt. Walter N. Cook of the homicide squad, Precinct Detective Thomas I. Herlihy of special investigations, and Detective Sergt. George H. Robison of the sex squad.

Presence Of Mind

So much is automatic and mechanical in the operations of railroads as compared to their operation a few decades ago that it is easy to forget how much room is still left in railroading for individual initiative. Several hundred passengers on the New York-New Orleans special of the Southern Railway System, however, are not likely to forget it again. Nor is Washington itself. One man's quickness averted a serious crash Monday night in the Washington Terminal yards, and the man was Joseph Callow, a 27-year-old operator of a switch tower near 3d st. and Florida ave. ne.

A railroad man for only two years, Callow was confronted with the spectacle of a runaway switch engine careening down a track along which the Southerner was traveling into Union Station with 200 passengers aboard. The switch engine had gotten free because of some defect in the airbrake. Callow had only two choices. One was to let the switch engine continue. It was only 15 or 20 feet away from the only remaining point where it could be switched away from a head-on collision. The other was to switch it to another track, occupied by a string of passenger coaches being shunted into Union Station, with only the conductor and brakeman aboard. In the seconds available to him, Callow chose the latter alternative, and threw the automatic lever which put the runaway engine on the path of the oncoming empty coaches but saved the Southerner from a hit.

Callow's choice caused a lesser collision, which derailed several cars and tied up operation of the yards for an hour, but he saved many from serious injury or death. The conductor and brakeman of the empty train jumped clear. The passengers on the Southerner, the railroad and the city owe gratitude and great commendation to Callow for his presence of mind.

Preventing Sabotage

One virtue of the President's message to Congress on internal security is that it put first things first and concentrated on real and imminent as distinct from imaginary and potential dangers. In our view, the most pressing of the problems on which the President asked for legislative action is the protection of national defense installations from sabotage. These installations are so vital to national security and so obviously enticing a target to enemy agents that the utmost care in safeguarding them must be reckoned the first order of business in promoting the country's safety.

What the President seeks in this connection is a law similar to one which was in effect during the war but which expired in 1947. It would authorize the Secretary of Defense to promulgate, with the President's approval, regulations for the protection of airports, harbors, bases, laboratories and other property or places in the custody of the National Military Establishment against the dangers of injury by accident or sabotage. In case of war or national emergency, such regulations could be extended to all property and places designated by the President in the interest of national security and would govern, among other things, admission or exclusion of persons. Violation of these regulations would be punishable under the terms of the Magnuson bill, introduced to carry out the President's security message, by a $5000 fine or a year's imprisonment, or both.

Such regulations make no intrusion upon personal liberties. They are aimed only at the prevention of overt acts inimical to the country's safety. There is no objection to them, so far as we know, from any responsible source; authorization to issue them is provided in the McCarran bill as well as in the Magnuson bill. Since they constitute an elementary precaution about which there is no controversy, it would be wise, in our opinion, to deal with them in a separate piece of legislation which can be enacted speedily without the conflict bound to rage over other features of the McCarran and Magnuson bills.

The outposts of American defense are perhaps especially in need of the most rigorous security precautions. For it is these that an enemy would be most eager to cripple by sabotage before launching any frontal attack. They constitute at once the perimeter of protection for the country and at the same time the primary sources of the counteroffensive with which the United States would respond to any attack. No rational safeguard of these ramparts should be neglected. Congress should respond at least to this facet of the President's appeal without hesitation or delay.

Korea: First Phase

Today, 60 days after the invasion of Korea, it is the considered opinion of military authorities that the first phase of the battle has been won by the Americans and South Koreans. Barring some totally unexpected show of Stalinist strength, it has been demonstrated that the beachhead can be held and that MacArthur's forces will not be pushed into the sea. The supply port of Pusan is relatively secure and the communications center of Taegu so far is saved if not safe. This accomplishment proves again the wisdom and valor of the delaying action fought by Americans and South Koreans until the shortened line could be stabilized. It also is testimony to the near-miracle of supply and reinforcement that has been wrought, and to the vigorous air and sea support by American and allied forces.

While this initial success is cause for satisfaction, however, it does not yet warrant the gilt-edged optimism exuded recently in some of the dispatches. The tide, to use a well-worn cliche, has not yet been turned. That will come only when the United Nations forces are able to mount an offensive to roll the Stalinists back, and such preparation probably will require several months at a minimum. What now may be expected is a buildup similar to that which took place in Italy prior to the capture of Cassino, with all sorts of local forays, artillery duels, probing and repulsing in the meantime—all this provided, of course, that the Muscovite puppets are not reinforced with more troops from China or Russia.

When the push does come it will be no easy job. We are dealing with a fanatical enemy, as the murder of General Dean shows. Some 15 North Korean divisions have been identified, and more reserve divisions possibly are being activated. Against this, as Joseph Alsop reports, there are now four identified American divisions plus support troops and four South Korean divisions. To be sure, approximately half the North Korean divisions, which were of smaller size than the American divisions to begin with, have undergone considerable mauling. Even if the estimates of enemy dead are cut in half, they are substantial. Nonetheless, it will take time to build anything approaching numerical equality, not to mention the classical superiority judged necessary for an offensive. Since more troops are not likely to be sent from the United States for the time being, much will depend on how promptly and generously other United Nations members respond to the calls upon them.

The hidden factors in all this, of course, are improved weapons, air power and sea power. Air superiority, which has impeded North Korean movements, gives a considerable advantage and may lessen the necessary ratio of ground troops. Nor does it follow that the campaign back must follow the same course as the battle down the Korean peninsula. General MacArthur is the strategy planner, and undoubtedly he is considering many possibilities including amphibious invasion.

Although the end of the conflict may be far off, United Nations thinking is imperative now on what happens after the battle. The war might end suddenly if the Russians decided to call off their dogs when they saw the game was up. Or the North Koreans themselves might become dispirited. Or guerilla action might continue long after the battle phase, tying down large numbers of men—though if Greece is an example guerilla activity might halt after decisive military victory. In any case, the United Nations must be prepared to deal promptly with any of these eventualities, and it is regrettable that the Indian resolution has again been postponed. The U. N. must be ready to step in, not only with plans for settlement and for interim government in Korea, but also with a permanent police force if that should become necessary.

Reaction In Greece

The fall of Nicholas Plastiras as Prime Minister of Greece will arouse some disquiet lest the fiscal and administrative reforms that Ambassador Grady urged upon Greece will be shelved. Plastiras with his coalition seemed to represent most nearly the voters' choice in the elections which were held March 5 after the military defeat of the Communist guerillas. He also seemed to be the man with the requisite courage to initiate the kind of self-help which, formally, is the condition precedent to ECA aid for economic rehabilitation. However, Plastiras is something of a maverick, and the man upon whom he relied for support in the Assembly, the Liberal Sophocles Venezelos, seems from the first to have stayed aloof from Plastiras. This is hardly surprising on personal grounds. For years past Greek government has been a sort of Populist-Liberal or Tsaldaris-Venezelos monopoly, and Plastiras' reappearance must have seemed like that of an interloper at an exclusive club. It was only at the urging of Mr. Grady that after the election Venezelos resigned claims to the Premiership which were supported by the King himself.

In the few months of Plastiras' tenure of office he seems to have sought to heal the nation's wounds by overliberality toward the surrendered rebels and the detainees. This he has done apparently without much consideration for his colleagues. The tendency is certainly in the right direction, for the new unity in Greece will never be sustained by undue harshness, though only those on the spot can say whether the clemency has been too rash and precipitate. It seems a fact, however, that the policy has aroused sufficient opposition to enable Venezelos to stake out his own claim again, and he now becomes Plastiras' successor, with the portfolio of Foreign Affairs and Defense to boot. It is a tall order, not to say a big assignment, and there is nothing in Venezelos' career to indicate that he can carry this heavy burden without assistance. But the chief concern is whether he will be able to push through the reforms which alone would justify continued American economic assistance.

Shigenori Togo

Reports of paroles and pardons for men convicted in the war crimes trials in Germany continue to flow in, but a strange silence is to be noted in Japan, though the reason for action in Japan is as urgent there as in Germany. We are reminded of this need by the death in prison of Shigenori Togo. Togo, who was serving a 20-year sentence, had long been suffering from jaundice and complications arising out of it, and his doctors some months ago petitioned the Supreme Commander for a parole, on the grounds that his state of health required his removal to his home. The petition was turned down, and within 24 hours Togo was dead, his last link with life having snapped under the blow of refusal. To be sure, it would have meant stretching a point—Togo still had three years to go before he was entitled to a pardon—to use the amnesty power, but, aside from any consideration of humanity, the new phase in our relations with Japan would surely have warranted the step.

The doctors were joined in the petition by a number of people who knew Togo as Minister for Foreign Affairs both at the beginning and at the end of the war. He served in the Tojo ministry at the time of Pearl Harbor, so that he was in the position of being guilty by association with the army conspirators, who were the villains of the piece in prewar Japan. There was no excuse for this, but it so happens that Togo came back to the same office under Suzuki when Japan surrendered, and it is now a known fact that he was the man who worked hardest for capitulation, even at the peril of his life. The part he played at that time was proffered as warrant for the slight clemency that was asked of the Supreme Commander. Perhaps the death of Togo may initiate a relaxation in the application of a policy that seems very rigid in Japan; such a relaxation would be more in accord with the changed times in Japanese-American relations.

Pro-Control Opinion

More than 70 percent of the voters in a recent Gallup survey think the Government should put price controls on meats, butter, sugar, fats and oils, while less than 40 percent approve the rationing of these same products. If the voters are typical representatives of the American public, it is evident that a great many Americans are ignorant of the way in which the free price system operates, and the disruptive effect on distribution of price controls.

Under normal conditions buying decreases in a free market when prices rise, and by such means a balance is maintained between the demand for any commodity and the available supply of it. People who are unable or unwillingly to pay higher prices simply withdraw from the market—in other words, they go without the desired goods. When prices are prevented from rising by Government edicts, on the other hand, demand is not reduced, and if goods are in scarce supply, a buying rush results that cleans out stocks. The early birds and hoarders get the goods, and the late-comers are confronted by empty store shelves.

That is why price controls when applied to prevent increases in prices of goods in short supply have to be accompanied by restrictions on the amount of the controlled product that individual consumers are permitted to buy in any given period of time. Anyone who believes that price controls without rationing will protect him from the evils of price inflation is the victim of a delusion. For, though he may pay less for the things he buys, he will have increasing difficulties in locating supplies of desired goods under the system of first come first served.

Folkways Of Politics

Issues in political campaigns change, as they did abruptly several weeks ago when the Korean situation required both major political parties completely to revise their proposed campaign arguments and slogans, but the manners, methods and atmosphere rarely do. Senator Taft formally opened his campaign in Ohio the other night and addressed himself to the Korean situation, yet his speech was delivered in a tent, pitched on a vacant lot in the heart of Cleveland, which is plentifully supplied with available auditoriums, including the vast Cleveland Municipal Auditorium. The old tradition involved is that many years ago in Cleveland a mayor believed to have the common touch campaigned in a tent.

Senator Lucas, too, opened his campaign in Illinois by addressing himself to the international situation, but he spoke at the Illinois State Fair, a traditional site for campaign openings. The tradition and symbol involved is that an agricultural fair is not only a display of harvest richness but a note of defiance to the wicked cities, particularly Chicago. In Pennsylvania and West Virginia candidates have hidden their junior executive business suits under overalls, donned miners helmets, and climbed down mines. In Iowa the candidates are said to be showing a great familiarity with the difficult place names of Korea, but they all know how to get word to a hog pen that supper's ready. Yes, the campaign is on.

GOP Foreign Policy

The statement by four Republican Senators generally castigating the Administration for its "ineptitude" in the conduct of our foreign affairs, if it becomes embroiled into electioneering politics, will certainly warrant careful scrutiny by the American people.

At the outset in fairness it can be noted that three of the four signitarjes belong to what might be described as the "more enlightened" wing of the Republican Party and their record on foreign affairs is generally a good one. But any attempt by the "less enlightened" wing of the party, such stalwarts as Senators Wherry, Kem, Capehart, Hickenlooper, Taft and House Minority Leader Martin, to climb aboard the bandwagon and beat their breasts self-righteously to denounce Administration "ineptitude" should be met squarely with the facts.

The truth of the matter seems to be that the same self-righteous masters of hindsight, who are now bleating about the "misconduct" of our foreign affairs, our "softness to communism," they call it, are precisely the same group who have consistently fought every Administration effort to help the peoples of the world build the kind of society upon which the ideological appeal of communism would fall on deaf ears.

They have fought, opposed or attempted to slash almost every appropriation for ECA, Point IV or Voice of America funds. (We know that the Marshall Plan was originally voted into being by the Eightieth Congress, but what was the position of the Wherry wing on it?) Senator Wherry is quoted as saying that ECA and Point IV are "throwing money down a rathole." This same group who bleats today of American "unpreparedness" were yesterday urging and applauding every possible "economy."

When will they realize that it isn't enough to offer the people of the world nothing but anti-communism? When will they realize that we must also offer them the tools with which they can build a social fabric strong enough to resist both internal and external aggression and thereby be strong enough to resist the appeal of a doctrine we know is morally and intrinsically evil? That, as I see it, has been the moral purpose of such undertakings as ECA, Point IV and the Atlantic Pact, and all the current hoopla by the Wherry-Martin wing of the Republican Party will not make their disgraceful record on those issues any better.

Homeless Indians

Representative Reva Beck Bosone (D. Utah) and those of like philanthropic motives who are not aware of the real situation, will give great applause to the bill in Congress to "set the Indian free."

The Indian is free to go when and where he pleases and to return at will. He is not held in bondage and kicked around in any Indian reservation, but on the contrary, is given every encouragement and school facilities through high school to develop his faculties to the fullest and at no expense to himself. And there is progress, slow, but progress.

But the vast majority have not arrived at that state of mind where they will not sell anything they have liberty to sell—home and yard, the roof over their heads. In South Dakota, there was a vast influx of whites into Yankton, Lower Breue, Sisseton, Cheyenne, Standing Rock, Rose Bud, where the whites made homes for themselves and their children's children—not the Indian's children's children. It is not on record that an Indian ever bought back a foot of land he had sold. Then the white man moved west and took over the east portion, the best portion of the Great Pine Ridge. Then John Collier — God bless him — came on the scene and stopped the sale of Indian land.

In any of these reservations may be heard today the hum of mowing machines, binder and thresher. But it is the white man's machinery. The Indian looks on while the white man threshes his golden grain from land that was once his own.

Surely Representative Bosone would not wish Indian land sold until there was no place left upon which to set up a flag pole. Roving bands of hungry and ragged men and women and children would adorn our landscape and I cannot think they would bring much happiness to the residents as they moved from village and town to village and town in the endless march over the great West.

Sesqui Discount

It has been announced by the Sesquicentennial Commission that Federal and District employes will be entitled to a 20 percent discount on tickets to Faith of Our Fathers." There is no justification for this discrimination against most of the taxpayers of the United States, who support this project.

Vatican Mission

It may be clear from the record that the first American mission to the Vatican was established in 1848 and terminated in 1867, but historians do not agree as to the motives for establishing and terminating it. Mr. Stanley Lichtenstein's statements as to such motives in his letter of August 13, therefore, are merely speculative.

His belief that the "virtual recognition by the Papal States of the Southern Confederacy was another factor which led to the termination of the mission" is based on the opinion of one man—Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, a Protestant. How, then, can this be considered conclusive evidence of his assertion?

The statement that the Vatican informed Adolph Hitler in August, 1942, of the coming invasion of North Africa rests on the testimony of Otto Abetz, a former Nazi. A member of an organization which was the enemy of Christianity would certainly not hesitate to lie about the Vatican and otherwise defame the Church.

Mr. Lichtenstein's concluding remark that the members of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the United States are representatives of a "foreign power" and should register as other representatives of foreign states are required to do, merely exhibits his gross ignorance of the Church. The members of the hierarchy in this country are citizens of the United States and owe spiritual allegiance, only, to the Pope, not as a "foreign power," but rather as the Visible Head of a Universal Church.

Illegal Immigration In Texas

I wish to call to your attention the situation among Mexican migratory farm workers as made public before the President's Commission at its hearings in Brownsville and El Paso, Tex.

Federal laws have not been so outrageously violated here since prohibition days. Our United States border has been virtually erased from the map along the hundred-mile stretch of the Rio Grande that goes through the Magic Valley.

I refer to the fact that almost the entire cotton crop in the valley this year was picked by aliens who had slipped into this country illegally. There has been, in past years, some pretense at rounding up these contraband laborers, called "wetbacks." This year there was none.

Yet their presence here is in violation of international agreement, and of our own immigration laws. Now that we are at war the Alien Registration Act is also being ignored on a scale involving several hundred thousand people in this area.

Immigration officials at El Paso testified, "With little additional men and equipment we could do an efficient job. It is a disgrace to this country that her laws are flouted and openly evaded."

I think this places the blame squarely on Washington. From what I have been able to learn in the Rio Grande Valley, the blame may well be split between local officers' dereliction of duty and Washington officials' cutting back on personnel and equipment.

Admittedly the pressure on Washington must be strong, what with a 50 million dollar cotton crop to be picked. But there is a moral issue: Can profits justify this wholesale violation of our laws, this importation of destitute hoards of foreigners to be worked at slave-labor pay while thousands of citizens must leave the valley in search of decent wages?

The average "wetback" made 20 or 25 cents per hour while working. Now that the season is almost over he finds that he hardly managed to feed himself and get a suit of work clothes with what he earned. He will soon be dumped across the border and left to starve or bum his way home.

This army of Mexico's unemployed peons, because of their illegal status, is forced to sleep on their cotton sacks on the ground, hidden out in the brush, or in tents at best. They work from dawn to dark, drink water from irrigation ditches or cattle ponds, eat only the coarsest food which is prepared over a campfire. If they question short pay or complain of conditions they are threatened with deportation. As long as they work in the fields their citizenship will never be questioned. Yet this year thousands of "wetbacks" have gone to town on Saturdays and openly walked the streets, so shameless has been laxity of the immigration service.

I have several questions. How can valley farmers and Washington officials who do their bidding, reconcile the use of cheap imported labor in the harvesting of a crop which enjoys the privileges of being sold on the United States market duty-free? The cotton crop this year had acreage allocations which, added to the Korean situation, ran the price of valley cotton up to 40 cents a pound. Foreigners were paid 1¼ cents a pound to pick this white gold. Also, the valley crop is the earliest in the Nation every year, and enjoys the top bids before the slump hits the market.

What fate awaits the tens of thousands of resident and citizen farm families, largely of Mexican extraction, who formerly lived by their labor on valley farms but have been displaced by the "wetbacks"? Why is it so much effort is being made to apprehend aliens trying to come north out of the valley, and so little care is exercised at the river?

Girding For The Long Pull

By Malvina Lindsay

U. S. Awakening

YOU FIND people increasingly eager to talk about it—not the shifting battle line in Korea, but the bigger question that hovers darkly in their minds. A few months ago, even up to the Korean outbreak, you often felt in conversation a tacit escapism, an unspoken "let's pretend this veneer of peace is real."

Now everywhere you come upon the troubled American mind trying to think it through. What is ahead for the long pull? The cosmic drama of an atomic war? Years of dirty, savage little wars in far-off places? Decades of world police duty? A generation of armed-camp living, belt tightening, sacrifice? A long, uncertain, dangerous inching toward some form of world order?

You are struck by the serious, adult effort so many Americans are making to understand just what they are up against. Not, of course, those buying nylon stockings by the dozen, or those childishly belaboring some person, event, or a discriminatory fate for upsetting their doll's house of "peace." But for all the apparent life and politics as usual, the absorption in personal affairs, the vague hoping that something will happen to make things right again, you sense a girding of the spirit among persons in all walks of life.

This widespread "where do we stand?" attitude reminds you of patients in doctors' offices asking with calm courage for the whole truth. But now, alas, no doctor's concise diagnosis can be given these questioners. Hence they must grope with their own thoughts and words.

TIME AND AGAIN you hear, "Well, if we get off without a full-scale war we're lucky." Occasionally someone predicts a lurid scene of bombs raining from the skies. More rarely a complete pessimist cites the world's millions under Communist control and pictures this country becoming a vast concentration camp.

But nearly always there is complete confidence in this country's eventual victory in whatever kind of struggle lies ahead. "All I'd like to know," says the average man, "is what it's going to take out of us."

You also meet up again the moralist who wonders if this Nation will get one more chance. "Read your old Testament," he says. "That shows how Jehovah, or whatever you want to call the force behind things, struck down the Israelites whenever they got out of hand. We Americans have gotten cocky, careless, materialistic, soft. We've had it easy compared to most peoples of the earth. It could be that we'll have to be disciplined, meet our time of trial. Or . . . maybe we'll wake up in time to get another chance."

Slowly but definitely the idea seems to be sinking in that there is no quick or easy way out this time, that even American ingenuity and invention can't work the miracle of peace. "We might as well make up our minds to be the policeman of the world for years to come," says a tradesman as he wraps your parcel. "England served her time at that and now she's too weak. We'll have to take over." "What's that going to do to taxes?" asks a customer, and the forum is on.

PEOPLE ARE facing up to the costs of what lies ahead much more calmly than you had expected, considering the sensitiveness of the pocketbook nerve. Of course it's going to cost, they say, but anything's cheaper than total war. Lives are more precious than dollars. All those who see beyond their noses in their talk—and they are many—seem willing to sacrifice greatly for any measures that hold promise of averting atomic war. Even the idea that a 50-year era of development for the world would be infinitely less costly than a five-year era of total war has begun to sink in.

Hearing all this eager thinking out aloud, you feel reassurance over the calm with which so many are saying that at best there will be years of armament and spending and anxieties and war scares ahead. "We'll just have to make the best of it," you hear over and over again.

Also you are struck with the vigorous optimism of Americans who survey the future realistically. Sure we'll come through all right no matter what happens, many say in effect, and without braggadocio. What if we haven't the numbers of people, or the armed men, or the tanks or even some of the minerals we need? We have the energy and the brains—and our brains are free. After all Korea has awakened us. Maybe we'll be smart enough now to avert other Koreas around the world. If not, we'll meet whatever comes.

You think of what Bernard Baruch said to Winston Churchill about Americans, that they are sometimes slow to see a point but when they do—nothing can beat them.

Disarmament

A public opinion poll last week indicated that more than 70 percent of the people of the United States now favor having the U. S. arm Germany and Japan to fight Russia. A few years ago almost everyone favored arming Russia to fight Germany and Japan. And during these years we have been arming ourselves to fight all three.

Doesn't such absurdities as these drive home the fact that the only sensible armament program is universal disarmament?

Matter of Fact

By Joseph Alsop

The Odds

TOKYO—The best way this report can begin is with a curious recent experience of the reporters. At the front that morning, a crack Marine battalion was sorely hurt and temporarily pinned down by the sudden appearance of the enemy on a seemingly unscalable mountain crest on the flank. Later, other units were similarly harassed. And all day long the North Koreans also demonstrated their knack of omnipresence on the main supply road, with occasional roadblocks and sniper fire that still punctuated the jeep trip to the rear in the dusk.

That evening, glancing through a pocket edition of Plutarch, this reporter found a description of the troubles of the Roman republican general, Metellus, with the wild Iberian tribes in Spain. Nearly 2000 years ago, the old historian wrote in part as follows:

"Metellus had had experience in battles fought by regular legions of soldiers, fully armed and drawn up in due order, admirably trained for encountering and overpowering an enemy who came to close combat, but entirely unfit for climbing among the hills, and competing incessantly with the swift attacks and retreats of fleet mountaineers, or to endure hunger and thirst, or to live exposed to wind and weather, without fire or covering."

In the foregoing passage, you may simply substitute the name of Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker for that of his Roman predecessor, Metellus. You will then have the most succinct possible statement of one of our main difficulties in Korea today.

THE MARINES above-mentioned had actually been trained in mountain war, but most of the troops thus far available to Walker have been trained on occupation duty. Until they have been fighting for a while, a good many of the men and even officers would literally rather die than climb a hill, and this in a country in which every key position is on a hill or mountain.

Meanwhile, this age-old advantage of the Iberian over the Roman legionary, the Indian over Braddock's Lobsterbacks, the North Koreans over our men, is a major factor in any calculation of the odds in Korea. Transportless North Korean divisions today have far more mobility in the actual zone of combat. Time, training and bitter experience can also correct this situation.

What is worse, the main problem will only just be reached when this special advantage of the enemy has at last been overcome. In the matter of the main problem of how we can take the offensive in Korea, all correspondents notice the same singular phenomenon, when they make necessary trips from the front to the command post to forward headquarters to this dreary city, in order to send off copy. The further from the front you get, the more hopeful grows the forecasts, until you reach Tokyo and they talk of victory by Christmas. This makes you wonder just who has gone mad.

CERTAINLY, unless the Pentagon is getting ready to unveil its once famous secret weapons, there seems to be nothing in the facts to justify such a hopeful Tokyo. It is not sustained by the facts which are all too simple and all too bleak.

In brief, no less than 13 North Korean divisions are surely in the field. Two more are probably in action, and the intelligence indicates that four new divisions will be ready before long. Against this enemy force, actual and potential, we have the rough equivalent of eight divisions, including four South Korean divisions rated as useful as ours for defensive fighting. Some more strength is on the way. But the classical ratio of strength, declared by all prudent commanders in order to assume the offensive, is at least two to one.

On the basis of this ratio, we should need at least 26 American and South Korean divisions to undertake a big push northwards. Of course, on the other hand, our divisional fire power is superior, and we enjoy total air supremacy—which is all that has kept us from being thrown out of Korea before this.

The air is the great hope. When the battlefield is isolated, when the enemy's supplies are not replenished, when he is expending his forward supply stocks, then the classical two-to-one strength ratio will cease to hold. The North Korean power will then wither and decay. But a "day of supply" for the North Koreans, who use so little mechanized equipment, who eat only one main meal, who can get by on a daily handful of rice and enough ammunition for their weapons, is less than one tenth of the day of supply of an American division. Thus the air task is 10 times harder than in a more conventional war.

SO THE FACTORS in this complex calculation interlock and alter one another, backwards and forwards. One man speaks of great power drives by irresistible armored spearheads in the manner of the Germans against the French in 1940, and another correctly points out that any country in which a tank cannot leave the road is hopeless country for armor. Still another has high hopes of saturation bombing of enemy troop concentrations until he is answered with the figures of air strength needed to make this tactic truly effective. And so it goes.

From the general welter, nonetheless, two points insistently emerge. Because of our air supremacy, we may still hope we are not involved in a greatly protracted, almost major war in Korea. But as for the quick victory which so many people seem still to expect from only slightly augmented American and South Korean forces, it will demand a military miracle. Military miracles may reasonably be prayed for and sometimes they even happen. But the expectation that prayers will be answered is not a sound basis for future planning, national or other.

In blunt words, President Truman and everyone else ought to stop gurgling optimistic noises, and begin to work on the assumption that this war with an enemy with 19 divisions in the field or coming into it, may be pretty long and very hard and very bloody. Any other approach to our task is a betrayal of the men at the front.

Avoiding the Veto

By Marquis Childs

Plan To Strengthen The U. N.

THE LOUD noises coming out of the United Nations headquarters at Lake Success have made it sound as though this was the beginning of the end of the second try at world organization. But there is a hopeful view which holds that this is the end of the beginning, or trial stage, with a new and creative phase more than a possibility.

Childs

The hope is based in considerable part on the plans under discussion for the session of the General Assembly next month. While these plans are still highly tentative, the very fact they have reached the memoranda stage indicates the U. N. may be able to move off the present dead center of bitter dispute.

No. 1 is a proposal to be put before the Assembly calling for a revision of the U. N. Charter. This would take the form of a kind of constitutional convention to overhaul the basic document adopted at San Francisco. It would be a second San Francisco Conference with member nations sending delegates to amend, or even discard, the present Charter and start anew.

That could be a way out of the straitjacket that today seems to hold the U. N. in a state of perpetual dissension. At any rate it is being seriously studied by those who believe that bold and positive steps are necessary.

Russia could not apply the veto in the Assembly to a proposal for such a convention. Such a conference can be called, "for purposes of reviewing the present Charter" by a two thirds vote of the General Assembly, and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. This could therefore be brought about regardless of the Russian attitude.

BUT WHEN it comes to alterations, the rat-trap rigidity of the present U. N. constitution again seems to apply. The language of the Charter is as follows:

"Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two thirds vote of the conference shall take effect, when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes, by two thirds of the members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council."

If such a conference should agree by two thirds vote to throw out, or radically change the veto power in the Security Council—the big monkey wrench—Russia, a permanent member of the Council, could refuse to go along. The belief, however, of those who are working up this plan is that Russia would not get away with it.

Faced with the virtually unanimous desire of other nations to force a really meaningful Charter, Russia might hesitate. A veto or a walkout would make perfectly plain to the whole world that the final source of obstruction was the Soviet Union.

Proposal No. 1 is related to proposal No. 2. A conference to review the U. N. Charter would be called with one specific and limited objective in view. That would be to make a change in the present permanent members of the Security Council. India would be substituted for China.

This would do a lot of things. To begin with, if it could be brought about, it would eliminate most of the friction over whether Red China or Nationalist China should sit in China's permanent seat.

THE NATIONALIST delegate today represents nothing more in fact than the Island of Formosa and Chiang Kai-shek's hold on that island. This is obviously unreal. In his brilliant and searching book, "War Or Peace," John Foster Dulles says that the Communist delegate should be seated when it is clear beyond any doubt that the Communist Chinese are, in fact and in law, the government of China.

But it is just as obvious that from the point of view of American public opinion, this could never happen while American troops are fighting and dying to drive out the North Korean Communist invaders. The Chinese Communists have pledged their loyalty to the North Koreans.

With China no longer a permanent member of the Council, the quarrel would be abated. And such a move would seem to make sense from other points of view. India is moving toward consolidation and unity. In contrast, China, in spite of the false surface of Communist "unification," seems still in the process of disintegration that has been going on for several decades. The Nationalists, if we accept their word at face value, will never stop until, first, by guerilla action and then by direct attack, the Communists are destroyed and supplanted. That could mean at least another 10 years of civil war.

If a U. N. conference were to vote to supplant China as a permanent member with India, Russia would be on the spot. To fight such a move and finally to veto it would be to stand in opposition to the hopes and aspirations of 400 million Indians, and this might have some weight even though Communist Russia has never hesitated to thwart the hopes and aspirations of most of the peoples of the world for peace.

Row Over Rivers-Harbors Bill Confuses Adjournment Plans

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A bitter House-Senate row over rivers and harbors and flood control projects, irreverently known as Capitol "pork," yesterday further complicated Congressional adjournment plans.

Work on the civil functions bill, carying the disputed projects, was virtually at a standstill following an open conference committee cleavage last week.

The projects disagreement, delaying final conference action on the big omnibus appropriation bill, highlighted an acute session-end log jam that forced Senate leaders to revise plans for a Labor Day get-away.

Following a meeting of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, devoted chiefly to the money bill tie-up, Senate Administration Leader Scott W. Lucas (Ill.) set a new goal for getting Congress out of town—"the week after Labor Day."

Lucas Favors "Stand-by"

Whether Congress adjours then, or recesses for three days at a time on a "stand-by" basis, is still a moot question, but Lucas said he favors the "stand-by" method.

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.) said he thinks Congress should either adjourn, or take a recess to some definite date, as soon as it concludes action on emergency legislation. Rayburn declined to speculate on an adjournment date.

The subject came up yesterday at a White House leadership conference but no definite conclusions were reached.

If Congress fails to complete its work by September 2, the House is tenatively planning a full week's recess for Labor day, from September 2 to 11. That may automatically force Congress into session another week.

McKellar Is "Disarmed"

The House-Senate conference row over civil projects, the latest complicating factor, began last Friday with a personal encounter between Senate Appropriations Chairman Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.) and Representative Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.), chief of the House conferees.

Colleague "disarmed" McKellar, by removing a gavel from his hand, and there has been no meeting of the civil functions unit since.

The two attended a conference on the State, Justice and Commerce Department bill yesterday, and no personal friction developed. Some leaders voiced "hope" that the civil functions stalemate can be broken just as peaceably before the week's out.

But the disagreement over the deadlocked civil functions bill goes deeper than any personal differences between McKellar and Cannon. The Senate boosted the total of the bill some 132 million dollars, including a number of unbudgeted projects. The House group, which traditionally objects to the Senate adding more "pork" to the bill, determined to stand pat.

If the House group refuses to yield on at least some of the items, Senate sponsors may try to tie them to the big 16- to 17-billion-dollar emergency rearmament bill when it reaches the Senate, projecting further conference difficulties.

Money Bill Is Affected

Tied up behind the civil functions dispute are two major portions of the omnibus money bill, on which conferees have yet to hold a single meeting.

One is the big $4,599,873,729 foreign aid section, including Marshall Plan funds. This section was written entirely by the Senate, and the House group will insist on some changes.

The other is the sharply controversial "general provisions" section, including the Senate-approved 10 percent horizontal cut in funds finally approved by Congress. The House unit, which has a separate "recision" bill on the way, may try to eliminate or "adjust" the Senate cut.

Also delayed by the money-bill tieup is the focal military assistance and rearmament measure, carrying all of the emergency funds the President has requested since the fighting started in Korea. This bill has not yet passed either House. Cannon said it cannot even be reported to the House until an agreement is reached on the omnibus money bill.

Other hurdles to be taken before Congress can leave town include final passage of the President's "interim" tax bill, slated to come up in the Senate Monday, a Senate and House free-for-all on pending "anti-Red" legislation, and conference clearance of the economic controls bill.

Hurricane No. 2 Blows Itself Out

Miami, Fla., Aug. 22 (U.P.). — The season's second hurricane blew itself out over the ocean southeast of Pureto Rico today. But the Weather Bureau kept its eyes on number one and a storm that may become hurricane number three.

Hurricane number two, which earlier battered the leeward island of Antigua, degenerated into a series of squalls.

Hurricane forecasters meanwhile reported a new area of "suspicion" under investigation near Swan Island, a tiny United States possession in the windward channel south of the western tip of Cuba.

Million in Damage

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 22 (AP).—One person was reported killed and crops, communications and harbors suffered an estimated $1 million damage in the North Atlantic hurricane that swept yesterday across Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in 100-mile-an-hour blasts.

Two fishing vessels carrying a total of about 50 crewmen were missing today.

Safeway Net Off in Period; Laid to Strike

By S. Oliver Goodman

Safeway Stores, Inc., yesterday reported net income of $6,057,532 or $2.19 a share for the 24-week period ended June 17.

This compared with $6,943,147 or $2.53 a share in the similar 1949 period. Lingan A. Warren, president of the nationwide food chain, stated to stockholders that a substantial part of the drop in sales and earnings "must be attributed to the strike of the clerk's union against the company in the San Francisco Bay area." The work stoppage closed 63 stores in that region.

Warren added that sales and earnings would benefit from the settlement of the strike in July.

Net sales for the six-month period aggregated $491,411,668, against $518,702,572 in the like 1949 period.

The semi-annual report reviewed progress of the construction program announced last winter. Twenty-five new retail stores were completed in the first 24 weeks of 1950 and an additional 86 stores are under construction, Warren said. Another 147 retail locations await awarding of contracts and completion is being pushed for the end of this year.

Safeway in August operated 96 food stores in the District of Columbia, one less than at the start of the year. Of the chain's 1940 stores throughout the Nation, 195 are in D. C., Maryland and Virginia.

UTILITIES: Two utility firms whose shares are traded on the Washington Stock Exchange yesterday issued earnings reports for the 12 months ended July 31. Virginia Electric & Power Co. showed net of $9,369,675 or $1.93 a share, compared with $6,901,936 or $1.58 a share in the previous year. Southern Co. showed net of $16,827,376 or $1.24 a share, against $14,813,796 or $1.23 a share.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: William H. Mathews has been appointed manager of Ford Motor Co.'s newly-created sales promotion department . . . Joseph Rudden and Stan Smolen have been named new buyers for Fred Pelzman's Fashion Shop on F st. . . . Lewis L. Strauss, former member of the Atomic Energy Commission, has been elected a director of General Tire & Rubber Co. . . . George C. Ramey, formerly of Spring Mills, has joined Dan River Mills Inc. as director of field sales . . . John K. Herbert, general advertising manager of Hearst Magazines, Inc., will join National Broadcasting Co. on September 5 as assistant to president.

BENEFITS: Life insurance companies paid benefits totaling $6,496,000 in Washington in the first half of 1950, the Institute of Life Insurance reported yesterday. These included $4,154,000 on 1413 ordinary life policies; $1,381,000 on 1536 group life policies and $961,000 on 4068 industrial policies.

THRIFT PLAN: The Capital Reserve Corp., 1346 Connecticut ave., yesterday issued a prospectus describing a novel thrift plan to accumulate common shares of Potomac Electric Power Co. Called the Potomac Plan, money put up monthly by participants is used for the systematic accumulation of Pepco shares. President of the sponsoring firm is Charles R. Connolly, for 22 years in the investment business here. Custodian under the plan is the Hamilton National Bank. To meet the requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission, $100,000 already has been paid into the Potomac Plan, according to Connolly. Full details of the plan are in the 29-page prospectus, available at the Capital Reserve Corp. upon request.

IMPROVEMENT: July operating results of the first two railroads to report were encouraging. Southern Pacific showed net operating income of $4,406,519, a tidy gain over the $2,914,628 in the same 1949 month. Net operating income of Norfolk & Western in July stepped up to $1,660,830 from $903,536 last year.

PRICE STRAWS: Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. advanced the price of some paint brushes an average 7 percent . . . Easy Washing Machine Co. upped two non-automatic washers by about 6 percent . . . Casco Products Inc. hiked its automatic steam iron about 11 percent and increases of 3 to 5 percent were reported by other electric iron makers . . . Proctor Electric Co. raised its Champion automatic irons by 12 percent . . . Manning-Bowman Corp. made increases of $1 to $2.05 on nine different electric appliances including percolators, waffle irons and broilers.

BANK SCHOOL: Inauguration of a special two-year school for trust officers will be a highlight of the tenth Virginia Bankers Conference at the University of Virginia, September 5-9. Lewis L. Strauss, former member of the Atomic Energy Commission, will address the bankers on September 7 and lecture will be given the next night by Henry J. Taylor, economist and author.

EARNINGS: Hudson Motor Car Co. reported net income of $6,347,784, or $3.43 a share, for the six months ended June 30, compared with $5,928,244, or $3.11 a share, in the first half of 1949. Other earnings reports:

McCabe, Snyder in Dead Heat Racing in Opposite Directions

By J. A. Livingston

"Oh," said Alice, "I've just witnessed the most marvellous performance. Funny, surprising, yes, even ridiculous. And right on the White House lawn. You'd never think that Secretary of the Treasury Snyder had so much grace for his bulk. Or that Chairman — he was superb with his hands-off, everybody's-a-good-fellow policy."

Livingston

"To the point, to the point," demanded the Walrus and the Carpenter.

"Some of the President's cronies were sitting around Blair House talking about inflation," said Alice, utterly unruffled by the impatience of her listeners. "The question arose, "Who's right? McCabe or Snyder?'

"'They're both right,' said one of the cronies. 'Snyder wants to keep interest rates down. In that way, he saves money when the Government borrows. At the same time, McCabe wants to stop inflation. He argues if you don't allow interest rates to rise, if you don't prevent excessive bank lending, prices will go up and the Government will have to pay more for guns, tanks, airplanes and other things. Then, what Snyder saved in interest payments the Government would lose in higher defense costs. That's percent wise and Snyder foolish!'

ALICE NOW had everybody's attention—even the Mad Hatter's. "One of the cronies then said: 'Let's go back to the middle ages. Let's have a trial by ordeal. Let's see who wins.'

"'Should we make 'em walk on hot coals?' another crony asked.

"'A race, a race,' somebody suggested. 'That will be a riot.'

"The President beamed approval and summoned McCabe, Snyder being already there. They went over to the White House lawn, and the President asked Snyder and McCabe to toe a line. 'Now,' called out the President, 'On your mark, get set, go!' And off they went."

"I'd like to challenge the winner," shouted the March Hare.

"Then you'll have to challenge both," said Alice.

"You mean it was a dead heat," suggested the Red Queen.

"It was astonishing," said Alice. "The President pointed out the course—to a big tree and back. But at the word 'go' Snyder and McCabe were off in opposite directions, Snyder hell-bent for the Treasury, McCabe hell-bent for the Reserve Board."

"Did they ever come back?" the Carpenter wanted to know.

"YES. They both got back at the same time even though McCabe had farther to go. Snyder had a memorandum. He said he was going to sell $13,600,000,000 13-month Government notes at 1¼%. That would enable him to pay off 2% and 2½% bonds as well as the securities shortly coming due. He was all out of breath. But the beatific expression on his round face seemed to say, 'Look at the percentages I'll save you, Harry.'

"Then McCabe arrived. He was all out of breath, too. He announced that the Reserve Board had just decided to raise the rediscount rate of 1¾%. That's the rate at which banks can borrow from the Federal Reserve when they need funds to lend their customers.

"Well," said Alice, "one of the cronies promptly asked: 'Why should banks buy Snyder's 1¼% notes when if they want to borrow money from McCabe they'll have to pay him 1¾%.'

"'Just what I've been arguing all along,' said Snyder.

"'But you can't let Snyder have his easy money and stop inflation; you can't give banks a free hand and keep prices down,' countered McCabe.

"'You can,' said Snyder.

"'You can't,' said McCabe.

"'You can,' said Snyder.

"The President just laughed and laughed. I wasn't sure," continued Alice, "but I thought I heard him say, 'I like to see a healthy difference of opinion.'"

"Well, what happens now?" demanded the Red Queen.

"Snyder will try to sell his notes," Alice explained to her. "Nobody will want to buy them. So the Federal Reserve will have to buy them. It can't let the Government's credit collapse — not when we're trying to finance a war. At the same time, the Fed will sell bonds and notes it already owns to try to tamp down bank credit. It will buy high and sell low."

"That costs the Federal Reserve money," added the Carpenter.

"But it's such fun to have the right hand know what the left hand's doing and vice versa, and to do nothing about it," said Alice.

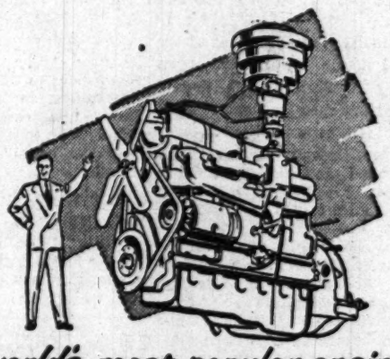
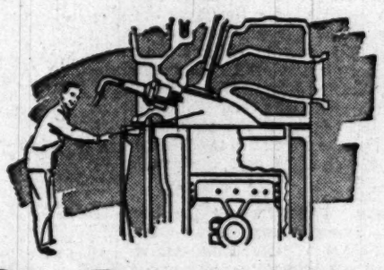
CHEVROLET

CHEVROLET TRUCKS deliver more horsepower at the clutch*



The world's most popular engine

More truckers use Chevrolet than any other make! And one important reason is Valve-in-Head engine design. For 38 years Chevrolet has been the largest producer of Valve-in-Head engines—engines world-famous for power, dependability, and outstanding economy.



Blue-Flame combustion

Chevrolet's Valve-in-Head design, constantly refined and improved during 38 years of development, makes possible the smooth, even burning of the fuel—blue-flame combustion. Combustion chambers are scientifically shaped to wring more power from every drop of gasoline.

Lower cost per mile!

Chevrolet's Valve-in-Head Loadmaster engine with greater horsepower at the clutch offers important advantages to truckers. It means greater efficiency—it means bigger pay loads at lower cost per mile!

Net horsepower : : : the power you use; the power delivered at the clutch . . . is the true measuring stick of a truck's ability to haul payloads. And for net horsepower, Chevrolet heavy-duty trucks with Loadmaster engine have no equal among the five most popular standard equipped makes in their weight class—13,000 to 16,000 lbs. G. V. W. Chevrolet heavy-duty trucks lead them all! Compare the facts! Check the serial plates of all other popular makes for proof. And remember—it's the power at the clutch that counts! Come in and let us tell you the full story of Chevrolet's truck leadership.

*Proved by certified ratings on engines used as standard equipment in conventional models of the five most popular makes.

PLUS—Chevrolet Advance-Design Truck Features!

TWO GREAT VALVE-IN-HEAD ENGINES: the new Loadmaster and the improved Thriftmaster—to give you greater power per gallon, lower cost per load • THE NEW POWER-JET CARBURETOR: smoother, quicker acceleration response • DIAPHRAGM SPRING CLUTCH for easy-action engagement • SYNCHRO-MESH TRANSMISSIONS for fast, smooth shifting • HYPOID REAR AXLES—5 times more durable than spiral bevel type • DOUBLE-ARTICULATED BRAKES—for complete driver control • WIDE-BASE WHEELS for increased tire mileage • ADVANCE-DESIGN STYLING with the "Cab that Breathes" • BALL-TYPE STEERING for easier handling • UNIT-DESIGN BODIES—precision built.

One on the Aisle—

'Kate's' a Corker; So Is Guild News

By Richard L. Coe

TO THE VACATIONER reluctantly returning to Job, our town offers a refreshing aspect few city dwellers enjoy. For what a beautiful city this is!

Edging into Job slowly, I went to "Kiss Me, Kate" Monday night at the Watergate, not expecting the top-notch evening I had. Apart from the fact that this big musical is the most ambitious evening the Potomac barge has ever offered, the evident delight of the huge crowd in the shadow of Abraham Lincoln's Memorial gives you a kick you wish everyone could enjoy. The luck of the weather plays a vital role at the Watergate, but the setting surely ranks with the stunning Muny Opera of St. Louis.

The real hero of the evening, as so many of you already have discovered, is Cole Porter. "Kate," the best score the Indiana son of riches has ever done, is downright brilliant. There's a humor in his tunes (and in Robert Russell Bennett's orchestrations) you find in no other composer of our time. He gives you his own views of music past and present, a snatch of Arthur Sullivan, a touch of madrigal, a bittersweet memento of Viennese operetta, a razzle-dazzle hot one ("Too Darn Tot") and a nifty of the vaudeville-burlesque duets—"Brush Up Your Shakespeare."

Technically, the problems of the limited barge stage have been cleverly handled, though during the performance backstage must resemble 14th and the Avenue at 5 p. m. Special sets have been constructed and the lighting is surprisingly efficient, with extra slugs of juice cabled in across the gangway.

Those choice roles of the scrapping lovers, as Miss Stein pointed out in her review, are in happy hands, and I'd only like to add that it's good to see that Frances McCann and Robert Wright are getting across the idea that "Wunderbar" is a spoof. Radio, as you've probably noted, has taken over this one seriously, ignoring Porter's ironic lines, "Gazing down on the Jungfrau." Yup, "Wunderbar" is supposed to be humorous and Monday night's audience took it that way.

With so vast a sea of faces to play to, naturally the production has to be broad. The suave delicacy possible in the New York theater where the show was born must give way to quite another style of playing. But Cole Porter and Director John C. Wilson would be enchanted with their Watergate spectacle (even if the potentially high profits weren't so tantalizing).

Come on down, boys, the water's fine.

BUT "KATE" wasn't the best news your reporter ran into. The fact that the Theater Guild-American Theater Society is resuming its subscription season here is the most important development on the Washington theater scene since Susan Peters opened the Gayety.

Already more than 5000 have subscribed to the series of six plays. It's likely that Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne will fly the first Guild banner since "Oklahoma!" closed the National. At all events, "I Know My Love" will be one of the attractions, as will Katharine Hepburn in "As You Like It." Shirley Booth in "Come Back, Little Sheba" and "Death of the Salesman."

Reappearance of the Guild in Washington is certainly big news, because although it has had some mighty thin offerings, it does remain the largest and most active producing organization in this country. With the Guild in, others will follow.

Washington Guild Manager Bess Davis Schreiner is now settled in her new office, Room 120, Raleigh Hotel, where you can see her Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays from noon till 5. With the Guild as tenant for a certain 12 weeks, the Gayety has a sure season to look forward to.

IT'S "MATINEE TODAY" at the new Arena Theater, where "She Stoops to Conquer" seems to have caught on handsomely . . . The classic comedy starts its second week tonight, and if I can crack the box office, I hope to make it.

AND WHAT WITH "Faith of Our Fathers," which they seem to be calling "FOOF" around here, and the liveliest Olney season the Skinner-Freyman combine has offered us yet, it begins to look as though there's once again a future for a drama editor on the banks of the Potomac.

MOVIEWISE I'm still at sea . . . Miss Stein has left an efficient-looking pile of clips, schedules and notes, high as an elephant's eye . . . But one assignment is clear: Sam Goldwyn's "Our Very Own" this morning at Keith's . . . AND, tonight, at 9, the Warner is having a sneak preview, the title of which seems to be "Sneak Preview."

OPENING TODAY: Farley Granger and Ann Blyth have a problem to face in Ann's sister, Joan Evans in "Our Very Own." The new Sam Goldwyn picture arrives this morning at Keith's

Bearden Unable to Hold Indians, Nats Lose, 5-1

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

YOU'D HAVE to say the time has come to take the Yankees a bit more seriously, at this point in the AL pennant race. Yesterday they won their fifth straight, knocked off the pennant-minded Tigers in a routine sort of way, and hoisted themselves within 2½ games of the league lead.

A couple of weeks ago, Casey Stengel's backsliding Yanks were no solid bet to finish one-two-three, with Joe DiMaggio afflicted by the miseries and the Indians and Red Sox making the boldest charge at the Tigers.

Povich

But that game in Yankee Stadium yesterday could be a turning point. Had the Tigers won it and extended their league lead to 4½ games, who was there to catch 'em? The Yankee threat would have been pretty well deflated, and neither Cleveland nor Boston is in good striking position.

Their resurgence is along typical Yankee lines. Yesterday they won a big one, for blue chips. They saddled the Tigers with another defeat in the important lost column. Their victory might well have softened up the Detroit club for the rest of the crucial series.

IF STENGEL gets his Yanks home this season, it would be his greatest triumph, more astonishing even than the Yankee victory of 1949 when DiMaggio was a baling-wire case, and injuries to a record-breaking number afflicted the rest of the cast.

DiMag has been healthy most of this season, but is lending only a .270 batting average to the club's attack. Joe Page has been a dismal flop. For most of the season, Stengel has been struggling without a first baseman following Tommy Henrich's knee injury. The Yanks weren't supposed to be a threat without Henrich. And Allie Reynolds, Stengel's big winner in 1949, has been pitching at a mere .500 rate this season.

Yet there the Yankees are, still threatening to take it all. DiMaggio came off the bench last week and his bat caught fire in a four-game sweep against the Athletics. Johnny Mize is taking up a lot of slack in the hitting department. Phil Rizzuto is still acting like the best shortstop in the league. Hank Bauer is blossoming as a hitting outfielder in the best Yankee tradition.

THE OLD MAXIM that pennants are won by beating the bums isn't quite holding true this season. If it were, the Red Sox would be on top, instead of in fourth place. They have murdered the last three clubs, the A's, the White Sox and the Browns, for 39 wins in 49 games, a better record than any other team in the first division against the same trio.

The best guarantee of winning the pennant apparently is to knock off the top teams. The Red Sox, by contrast, have failed dismally against the top three, losing 31, winning only 21. The Tigers have won 27 from first division clubs, lost only 22. The Yanks have done all right among the league's elite with a record of 26-22. The third-place Indians have fattened on the second division clubs but haven't played .500 ball otherwise.

Curiously enough, the team that has contributed most to the Yankees' discomfiture has been the fifth place Nats, who have licked 'em seven times in 13 games. If the Yanks do blow the pennant by a two-game margin, or less, they will have reason to remember those two horrendous spring days when Steve Nagy, now in the minors, knocked 'em off.

THE FAIR-HAIRED LAD of the Yankee pitching staff at this date is little Ed (Whitey) Ford, the kid called up from Kansas City a few weeks ago. He has tided them over nicely by winning four games for the Yanks, at a time when Stengel was beginning to wonder where his next winning pitcher was coming from.

Young Ford's brilliant debut for the Yankees is not quite as astounding to them as it might appear. They had him in training camp at St. Pete last spring, and Stengel had him ear-marked for future reference. He was pitching better ball than a lot of the Yankee regulars, but Stengel had no desire to rush Ford along, sent him out to Kansas City for more seasoning.

And that Yankee deal with the Browns last June 15, an hour before the midnight trading deadline, is now paying off for the Yankees. They were subjected to harsh criticism for that one, which sent five players and $50,000 to the Browns for Joe Ostrowski and Tom Ferrick, a couple of relief pitchers. Ferrick, however, has blossomed as the poor man's Joe Page, and personally has saved enough games to keep the Yankees in the race.

Berra, Yanks Pound Tigers, 13 to 6, Cut Lead to 2½

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Led by Catcher Yogi Berra, who powered across six runs with two singles, a triple and his fourteenth home run of the year, the New York Yankees gave the league leading Detroit Tigers a lusty 13-6 walloping today in the opener of their important three-game series at Yankee Stadium.

The one-sided licking at the expense of three second-line Detroit flingers reduced the Tigers' lead over the second place Yanks to 2½ games and sent the majority of 44,263 (39,602 paid) rain-sprinkled fans home happy.

Although the Tigers made only three fewer hits than the Yanks—11 to the winners 14—Chief Allie Reynolds kept a tight rein on them in all except one inning, the eighth, when they jolted him for four of their runs. Johnny Groth's 11th homer of the season into the right field stands accounted for three of them.

Joining Berra in his assault on Hal White, Marlin Stuart and Bill Connelly were big Johnny Mize, with three runs driven in on his 13th round-tripper and an outfield fly, and Gene Woodling with his fifth homer of the year.

Stranahan Wins From McHale, 1-Up

By Harold Classen

Minneapolis, Aug. 22 (AP).—Frank Stranahan and Willie Turnesa squirmed past rugged opponents late today to join Defending Champion Charles Coe in the third round of the golden anniversary national amateur golf tournament.

Stranahan, twice British amateur champion but never a major titleholder in his own country, defeated James McHale of Bethlehem, Pa., a fellow Walker Cupper, 1 up, after reaching the turn all even.

Turnesa, whose game supposedly is made to order for the 6655-yard Minneapolis golf club course, burst the bubble that was Richard Allman of Philmont, Pa., 3 and 2. Allman, who yesterday eliminated dynamite Goodloe of Valdosta, Ga., was six down at the turn.

Young Players Good

Coe, despite some poor putting and the strong winds that swept over the par 35-36—71 course in the morning, mastered Al Clasen of St. Paul, a determined public links shotmaker, 3 and 1.

Gene Littler, still 20 and from Seattle; Gene Kesselring from Kitchener, Ont., and even younger; Fred Wampler of Indianapolis; Al Mengert of Spokane; David Logan of Barrington, Ill., and Dow Finsterwald of Parkersburg, W. Va., all won matches.

And then there was 15-year-old Don Bisplinghoff of Orlando, Fla., who defeated Hobart Manley of Savannah, Ga., 1 up.

Two former champions, Harrison Johnston of Minneapolis, and Ted Bishop of Weston, Mass., were pushed to the sidelines during the day's 64 matches that set the stage for tomorrow's two 18-hole rounds.

Kellerman Loses To Selby, 5 and 4

Minneapolis (AP).—John Selby, New Orleans, eliminated Karl Kellerman, Chevy Chase, Md., 5 and 4, in today's second round of the National Amateur golf tournament.

Selby led, two up, at the turn, and won the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth holes for his victory margin as they halved the fourteenth hole in fours.

Ennis' Single In 9th Wins For Phils, 4-3

Cincinnati, Aug. 22 (AP).—The fighting Philadelphia Phillies blew a three-run lead, but then blended three straight singles for the winning run in the ninth to gain a 4-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds tonight.

2 Women Make It

9 Swim English Channel; Egyptian, 41, Sets Record

DOVER, ENGLAND, Aug. 22 (AP).—Nine swimmers conquered the English Channel today. An Egyptian army officer and a French electrician broke the all-time record for the 19-mile crossing. Seven others, including two women, crawled ashore behind them in a mass race sponsored by a London newspaper.

It was the biggest aquatic day the old Channel ever has seen. Never, since Matthew Webb swam across for the first time back in 1875, has there been anything like today's steady arrival of swimmers on the Dover coast from France. Only five persons swam the Channel all last year and only 29 had done it in the 75 years since Webb, up to today.

Hassan Abd-El Rehim, a strapping 41-year-old Egyptian army lieutenant, won the race—and a prize of £1000 ($2800) from the sponsoring London Daily Mail—by churning across the Channel in 10 hours 53 minutes, the fastest time ever recorded.

He sprinted the last few hundred yards to overtake tiring Roger Le Morvan, 26, Paris electrician, and beat him to shore by 10 minutes. The Frenchman had led a field of 24 starters from Cap Gris Nez

But the 217-pound Egyptian, spurred on by shouts of his supporters on land and sea, thumped on his big chest with both hands as he made shore and shouted:

"ALLAH, ALLAH, a record."

The winner of the Mail's £1000 ($2800) prize for the first woman to finish was Eileen Fenton, a 21-year-old English school teacher. In her first try at the Channel, she made the crossing in 15 hours, 31 minutes. She placed sixth in the race, behind five men. The other woman finisher was Jennie Kammersgaard, 31, a Danish lingerie designer.

The women's record—13 hours, 20 minutes—was set just two weeks ago today by Miss Florence Chadwick of San Diego, wick of San Diego, Calif. Until today she had been this year's only successful swimmer of the channel.

All the finishers, except the two winners, wor £250 ($700) from the Daily Mail. The third man to finish was another Egyptian—Mareeh Hassan Hamad, 33—who swam the Channed last year, too. His time this year was 12 hours 16 minutes.

Here is the order of the finish after Rehim, Le Morvan and Hamad:

4. Sam Rockett, 31, of England, 14 hours 8 minutes.

5. William Edward Barnie, 54, of Scotland, 14 hours 49 minutes.

6. Miss Fenton.

7. Jason Zirganos, 40, a Greek army major who also swam the Channel last year, 16 hours 17 minutes.

8. Antonio Albertondo, 31, of Argentina, 16 hours 23 minutes.

9. Jennie Kammersgaard, 31, Danish lingerie designer. 16 hours, 26 minutes.

The lone American entry among the 24 starters, from 12 nations, was David Frank, 27, a clothing designer from New York city, who dropped out early.

Feller Hurls 12th Victory, Yields Only Six Safeties

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Gene Bearden took to the pitching mound last night a heart full of revenge against his former mates, the Cleveland Indians. Unfortunately for the Nats, he also had with him a delivery full of basehits, and the upshot was a 5-1 licking.

Bob Feller neatly out-pitched Bearden, who had asked for the assignment in high hope of beating the pennant-minded Indians who cast him off to the Nats three weeks ago. While the Indians were pounding Bearden for 10 hits in the seven innings he lasted, Feller was completing a six-hitter against the Nats.

By their victory, the Indians picked up a precious full game on the league-leading Tigers and hauled themselves within 3½ games of the top.

Feller gave up a measly run to the Nats in the third inning, and that was all. He gave them a mixture of the remnants of his fast ball, and his good curve, and after the third inning brushed 'em off with two hits, permitting nobody to reach second base.

The victory was his 12th against eight losses.

For the 14,873 weather-brave customers who flaunted the threat of rain, it was a dreary exhibition by the Nats, enlivened only by Eddie Yost's threat to take a punch at Second Baseman Bob Avila of the Indians.

Yost's temper flared when Avila dashed into third standing up on a delayed steal in the sixth inning, causing the third baseman to drop the ball. After retrieving it, Yost bustled up to Avila, bumped him rudely chest-to-chest and was seemingly spoiling for a fight until calmer heads broke it up.

Bearden and his knuckler were bothering Rookie Catcher Len Okrie more than the Indians. A passed ball charged to Okrie figured in the Indians' second run.

They won the ball game by scoring in each of the next four innings after being blanked in the first. Always, it was with two out. Hegan's long double to center moved Rosen home all the way from first in the second inning after Rosen walked, to give 'em a 1-0 lead.

They came up with their second run after Avila singled to center and went to second on a strike that Okrie muffed after Doby swung. Doby then prodded him home with a single to right.

Bearden was threatening to pitch his way out of a mess in the fourth inning after Rosen and Boone led off with singles. Robertson bobbed Boone's ball in

Yes She Will Does With D. C.'s Arduini Riding at Bel Air

Bill Bennings . . .

DEAR FOLKS: AT BEL AIR

Betting here is some 15 percent under last year. Officials place some of the blame on the trotters but also bear in mind that Hagerstown and Cumberland, by taking spring dates, broke up the continuity of the minor track circuits. I believe one of the many causes is bucking Atlantic City. Bel Air once drew special trains and buses from the Philadelphia area. These fans now probably go to the Shore Oval. Jockey Sammy Palumbo, who has been riding his share of winners here, will pass up Timonium to go to Wheeling Downs. I know a fellow who didn't have a ticket on the $6.60 daily double. See you on the rail.—BILL.

Grab Bag 2d; Double Pays Only $6.60

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Bel Air, Md., Aug. 22.—Ray Arduini, Washington jockey, turned in a strong ride today to win the Fork Purse with E. L. Price's Yes She Will. The filly, operating in a field exclusively for 3-year-olds, was up in the final strides to win by a half length.

E. S. Voss, jr.'s Grab Bag was second and three lengths in advance of George Perry's Moose Pone in a field of 10. The winner, accounting for her second main purse of the year, returned an $8.60 win mutuel to backers in a crowd of 5000.

The track was good as the program began but turned slow when rain began to fall just before the fifth event. Yes She Will, a daughter of Reaping Reward, was clocked in 1:24 1-5 for the 6½ furlongs.

Although no records were immediately available, the daily double payoff of $6.60 was reported to have been the shortest in the history of this track. Naturally, the key winners were heavily backed favorites.

R. N. Boerner's Quick News won the first event under the handling og Jimmy Baird, the leading journeyman jockey at the meeting. The Busy Wire mare paid $3.60. Mrs. J. M. P. Bell's Frigate accounted for the second race at $4 Wiht Andy Russo, leading apprentice driver at this session, in the saddle.

It's a Law Now

Anglers Will Benefit From Dingell Bill

By Ralph Murdock

After an 11-year battle by the National Wildlife Federation with the cooperation of sports magazines and angling organizations, the Dingell bill has become law.

Murdock

This legislation earmarks funds from the present excise tax on fishing rods, reels, creels and lures for Federal aid to State fisheries restoration projects.

Although no license is required for salt water sport fishing in any State except California, it is expected that both salt and fresh water fishermen will benefit from this new law. The bill, pro-rated on the basis of license holders, will undoubtedly give the fresh water anglers allocation of funds for various projects.

THE RECORD for croakers up until last week was a seven-pounder. Then a Cape May, N. J., angler, David H. Ogden, of Oaklyn, N. J., fishing with shedder crab for bait, hit a new high when he bagged a 7½-pound hardhead. Ogden's catch measured 22½ inches long with a girth of 18 inches.

The record-shattering whopper was taken in an area where there has been a shortage of croakers for several years.

Just to prove that fishing is unpredictable, here's what happened to yours truly on two days. We fished from 11:30 a. m. till dusk both days. The weather was similar each day—blustery with rolling seas except the first day when we ran into several showers on the western side of the bay. We fished long and traveled far and the only time taken out was for chow.

NO BLUES SHOWED so we still-fished south of Sharp's Light. The party, which included Mr. and Mrs. Bernie Sansbury, Sergt. and Mrs. Pete Murray, Mr. and Mrs. John Forte and their 4-year-old daughter, caught 127 fish which included 14 trout, 3 blues and the balance spot. Captain Pennoyer was the skipper.

With Art Brown, Johnny Holland and his 14-year-old youngster, Johnny, jr., we fished practically the same waters the next day. The skipper was Jerome King and the boat Mary Lee. We failed to catch a fish. You figure it out.

Washington Boys Club Beaten by Brooklyn

Johnstown, Pa., Aug. 22.—The Washington (D. C.) Boys Club was defeated, 9-6, by Brooklyn in the first round of the All-American Amateur Junior Baseball Tournament here today.

The Harrisburg Keystones trounced the Bradford Boys' Club, Maryland State champs, 19-0, as Dave Goblin and Johnny Yingst hurled three-hit ball for the victors.

Giants Rout Rush With 5-Run Sixth

Chicago, Aug. 22 (AP).—The New York Giants continued their mastery over the Chicago Cubs today, scoring five runs in the sixth inning for a 6 to 5 victory.

Jim Hearn went the distance to pick up his sixth triumph and third in a row. The Cardinal castoff allowed only five hits, but two of them were home runs. Andy Pafko hit his No. 30 with two on in the third and Bill Serena connected in the seventh with the bases empty. Hearn fanned nine.

Thomson Ordered To Prosecute Fan

Chicago, Aug. 22 (AP).—A subpeona for Bobby Thomson, outfielder with the New York Giants, was issued today when Thomson failed to appear in court to prosecute a disorderly conduct charge against a spectator who threw a beer bottle at him at Wrigley Field June 10.

Police Lieutenant Welling told the court Thomson did not wish to prosecute because of the fear that he might be booed for having a fan jailed for tossing a bottle.

"It's not fair justice to have a player's individual feelings jeopardize the safety of spectators and players" said Municipal Judge Griffin.

Gussie to Tour As Pro, Report

GERTRUDE (Gorgeous Gussie) Moran of lace panties fame is turning professional for something like $75,000 to play Mrs. Pauline Betz Addie, former United States amateur champion, in a nationwide tennis tour, it was reported yesterday.

Mrs. Addie, who lives in Washington, is to be paid $25,000 for opposing Gussie, according to the report.

Outstanding male professionals will also make the junket, promoted by Bobby Riggs. A few days ago, Riggs told newspapermen he wouldn't pay Miss Moran $75,000 to turn pro. She isn't worth that much, he said.

Mrs. Addie did not deny the story yesterday. She said: "You might say that, as of now, it is in the rumor stage." Then she asked: "Did the story come from Riggs?" and "Did Riggs say who the male players will be?"

Grace Lenczyk Upset in Canadian

Winnipeg, Aug. 22 (AP).—Mrs. Bruce Campbell of Winnipeg today pulled a stunning upset by defeating Grace Lenczyk of Newington, Conn., 1947-48 Canadian open champion, 3 and 2, in the first round of the Canadian women's open golf championship.

Seven Washington Skippers Race in Thistle Regatta

By Happy Walker

SEVEN SEASONED Washington skippers take off today for the Thistle National Championship Regatta starting Thursday on Long Island Sound at Milford, Ct.

Walker

Winners at the recent Annapolis Central Atlantic States elimination regatta, the lucky seven will comprise the Central Atlantic Division along with Howard Duff, Ventnor, N. J.; Charles Cairnes, Baltimore, and Charlie Wiley of Oxford, Md. Local skippers making the 800-mile trek are Eric Nordholm and Hon Dang, Bill Heintz, chairman, President's Cup Sailing Regatta, Dr. Walter Lawson, Frank Marquardt, Jack Smith, Frank Greenman and Fred Taylor.

Dr. Walter Lawson will be defending his national crown annexed last year at Baltimore Yacht Club, despite the fact that he did not win a race. Second and third-place points did the trick.

By way of priming for the competition, Lawson landed two second places and a third for the series in the Thistle class at Corsica River Yacht Club regatta over the weekend. Another Washingtonian, Wirt Gill, commodore of the Potomac River Sailing Association, in the Penguin class, took the series with two firsts and a second.

WITH ONLY NINE United States Power squadrons taking part in the annual fifth district navigators' contest at Fairview, Md., over the weekend, the home town lads came uncomfortably close to retaining the ill-famed Sour Puss Trophy, indicative of last place position in the contest.

Charles M. Little's Pilot, Roswell Boothby's Makio II and Lendall Hewitt's Tahoka comprised the Potomac team which took eighth place, thereby relinquishing the unwanted honors to the Hampton Power Squadron.

Falls Church Girl Ousted

Philadelphia, Aug. 22 (AP).—Belmar Gunderson, Falls Church, Va., bowed to Defending Champion Maureen Connolly of San Diego, 6-1, 6-1, in the National Girls Tennis Championships' third round here today.

Miss Gunderson, who developed her game in Germany when her father was stationed there with United States occupational forces, was the second Washington, D. C., area entrant to fall before Miss Connolly. The 15-year-old Miss Connolly, seeded first, ousted Nancy Course, Chevy Chase, Md., 6-4, 6-2 in yesterday's second round.

In first round doubles play, Miss Gunderson and Mildred Thornton of Ormond Beach, Fla., defeated Shirley Haabestad and Betty Jean Weston, Philadelphia, 6-0, 6-3.

Bogley Beaten In Internationals

Lynbrook, N. Y., Aug. 22 (AP).—Tony Mottram of England defeated Washington, D. C.'s Gil Bogley, 7—5, 6—2, here today to help the International Club beat the United States Junior Davis Cup team, 11—8, in the fourteenth annual International Club match.

Sifford's 70 Leads Pros

Charles Sifford, of Philadelphia posted a two-under par 70 yesterday at East Potomac to lead the professionals in the first round of the United Golf Association's national championship tournament.

Ted Rhodes, Los Angeles, and Philadelphia's Howard Wheeler tied for second place with 72's.

Four Washington golfers, Everett Payne, Bill Mays, Archie Mayhew and Sted Lipscomb, tied for the third position with 75's.

In the amateur division, the 73, shot on Monday, by Washington's Raymond Thomas stood up for medalist honors

Balter Barker of Washington shot an 82 to lead the seniors. His score was five strokes better than Elmer Brent of New York, who took second place. W. Chapman of Philadelphia was third with 89.

Wolfe's 70 Wins Tourney

Billy Wolfe of Bethesda Country Club, won the Middle Atlantic Junior golf tournament with a par 70 yesterday at Indian Spring Country Club. Hugh Reed of Gonzaga High School was second with 73.

Wolfe had two birdies, two bogeys and the rest pars in taking the tournament.

Dennis Bolster of Bethesda, last year's champion who just recently returned from Ames, Iowa where he reached the quarter-finals of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce tournament, won the 16-and-17-year-old class crown with 74.

Lee Edwards of Manor and Bill Ball, Army Navy, tied for second place behind Bolster, with 75's.

Bob Peterson of Indian Spring was tops in the 12-and-13 class with 79. Jordon Ball, who motored here from Norfolk with his parents, was second with 89. Hank Ford, Kenwood, took the 14-and-15 title with 76, five strokes better than Perky Cullinane, Kenwood.

Keith Bowie, 10-year-old youngster, was the youngest and shortest participant. Keith, who doesn't quite reach the 5-foot mark, shot a 91.

Bunker Hill Wins 2d in Row, 17-3

Fairmont, W. Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—Bunker Hill Post of Washington, D. C., defeated Whitesville, 17-3, in the second round of the regional American Legion baseball tournament here.

Skidding Car Hits Another, Then Fence; Four Injured

Out-of-Control Truck Strikes Two Houses, Wrecks New Auto At Fort Belvoir

Four persons were injured and one of them may have suffered a fractured skull in a two-car collision at 2:45 p. m. yesterday in the 2500 block of Georgia ave. nw.

Police said the accident resulted when a northbound auto skidded on streetcar tracks made slippery by the rain, slanted into the wrong lane and collided with an oncoming car.

The skidding car was driven by Mrs. Maria Corvelli, 22, of 1656 Trinidad ave. ne., according to police.

Mounts Curb, Hits Fence

After the crash, Mrs. Corvelli's car careened across the street, mounted a curb and struck a metal fence.

All the injured were taken to Emergency Hospital. Most seriously hurt was Mrs. Corvelli's mother-in-law, Mrs. Elsie Corvelli, 43, of 633 Hamilton st. nw. She is in undetermined condition with face lacerations and a possible skull fracture.

The younger Mrs. Corvelli was admitted to the hospital, also in undetermined condition, suffering from possible fractures of the right hip and right foot. Her 5-month-old son, Nicolis, escaped with minor body lacerations.

Schwarting was admitted for treatment of abrasions to the forehead and lacerations of the neck.

Crashes Into Two Houses

Property damage was impressive but physical injuries light at about 7:15 a. m. when a tractor-trailer truck skidded on U. S. 1 at Accotink, Va., and struck two frame dwellings on the Fort Belvoir reservation.

Police said the truck, driven by James B. Thomas, 40, of Charlotte, N. C., struck one house a glancing blow, careened into a tree, rebounded and smashed flush into a second house.

The second house, a 7-room dwelling, was made a shambles, the truck plunging into the living room. The truck also wrecked a new automobile parked in front of the second house.

Mrs. Ruby Blanton, 44, and her son, James A. Tarpley, 24, were eating breakfast in the kitchen when the truck crashed into their living room.

James E. Smith, 38, of Concord, N. C., a passenger, was trapped in the wreckage of the truck for 20 minutes but was not seriously hurt.

The Federal Diary today is Jerry Kluttz's story on Page 1.

Four More Crashes Listed On New Marlboro By-Pass

The new Marlboro by-pass on Route 301 which has produced an average of an accident a day since it was opened a month ago was the scene of four crashes yesterday. Persons were injured in two of the accidents.

Since its opening, oil slick and concrete guard posts on the 4-mile stretch that by-passes Marlboro have been blamed for approximately 30 accidents, one of which produced a fatality.

In one of yesterday's accidents four persons were injured when a car driven by Thomas Powell, 25, of Jacksonville, Fla., skidded on the slippery surface, crashed into an automobile and house trailer on the opposite side of the road, crossed the road again, and struck a barrier.

Powell's father, Thomas Powell, 54, of Norfolk, Va., was thrown from the car and down a 10-foot embankment. He suffered a broken rib and broken elbow.

The younger Powell, his mother, Mrs. Nellie Powell, 51, and his wife, Mrs. Tillie Powell, 27, were treated by minor injuries.

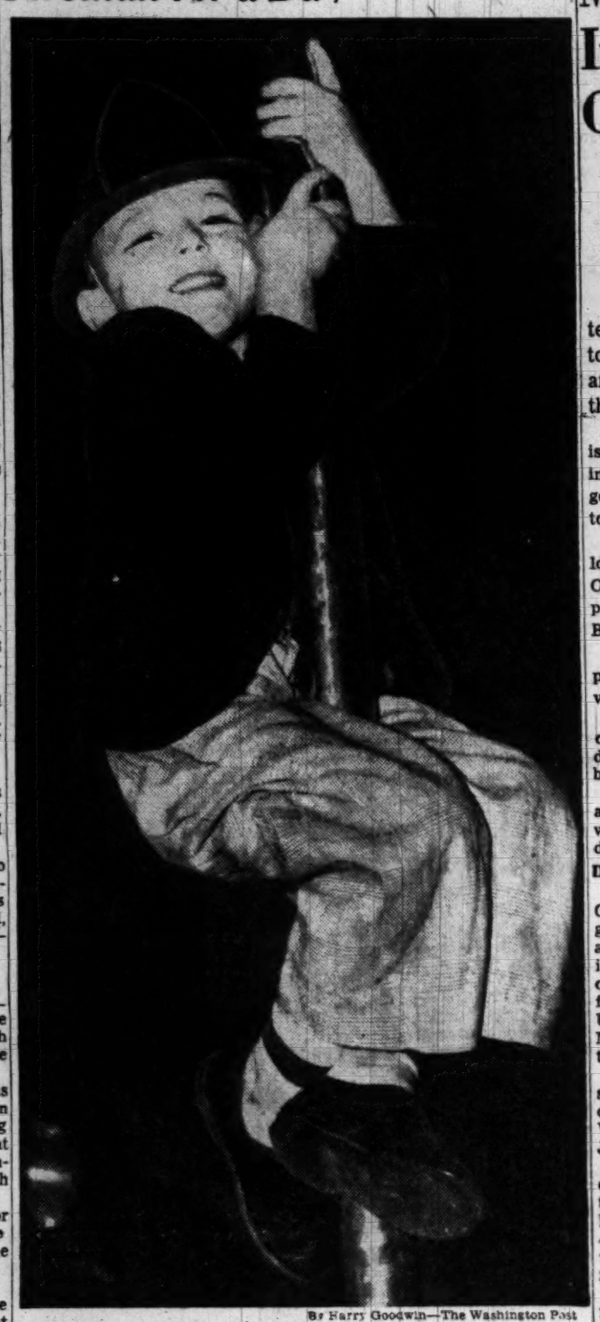
Fireman for a Day



By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

POLE SLIDER—Mike Rector, 5-year-old youngster who made a miraculous recovery from severe burns received over a year ago, was a guest of the fire department yesterday. Mike was presented with a red fire helmet, taken for a ride on the fire boat, and to lunch at No. 16 Engine Company. Mike's biggest thrill was sliding down the brass pole

Mike Rector 'Adopted' by D. C. Firemen

Mike Rector, Washington's 5-year-old fire victim, yesterday proved himself as spry as the firemen who feted him

He mounted their ladders, rode their ladder trucks, played water from their fireboat, and even slid down the alarm pole at Engine Company 16.

Mike is the youngster who suffered severe burns to 70 percent of his body, in November, 1948.

Yesterday, he showed that his 17 months in Casualty Hospital and his some 1000 square inches of skin grafts had made him whole again.

Mike 'Adopted'

The occasion was "Mike Rector Day" for the District's organized smoke-eaters, the District Firemen's Association, Local 36, International Association of Firemen. The members, numbering 1050, "adopted" Mike for his gameness.

As "fathers," they plan to supply Mike with money for clothes for school and other assistance.

Last night's "adoption" proceedings at a membership meeting at 419 7th st. nw., followed a day of inspection that would strike envy in any youngster's heart.

It started at Fire Alarm Headquarters, 4th and Douglas sts. nw., where Fire Chief Joseph A. Mayhew gave Mike a special "Fire Chief" hat. Then firemen there sounded alarm bells to all the District's 31 engine and 16 truck companies, as Mike watched the alarm lights flash.

The young "fireman of the day" then pulled the demonstration alarm box at the headquarters.

Next, Mike was taken to the wharves with his brother, Billy, 7, in a battalion chief's car, and both boarded the William T. Belt, District fire boat. "Fire Chief" Rector even lent his hand at steering the craft.

Mike was shown the ins and outs of firefighting from deckside, and permitted to shoot a spraying stream of water out the monitor pipe.

Fifteen firemen on duty at the firehouse of Engine Co. 16 and Truck Co. 3, at 13th and K sts. nw., snapped to attention when Mike was driven there from the dock. He shook their hands, one by one.

Then the firemen brought out their biggest vehicle and ran up its 100-foot ladder, just for Mike. They ran its around the block, too, with Mike first in the seat up front, and later on the back ladder post.

"Off duty," after lunch, Mike did what all good firemen are supposed to do.

He took a long nap at his home, at 613 Elliott st. ne.

Gen. Ramey Cleared in Traffic Death

Maj. Gen. Roger M. Ramey, Air Force director of operations, yesterday was cleared of blame by a coroner's jury in the death of a woman pedestrian Saturday morning.

The jury, after deliberating an hour and ten minutes, found that Mrs. Ruth Huntley, 29, of 1519 O st. nw., died as the result of an accident due to her own "carelessness."

Mrs. Huntley was struck by a car driven by Ramey about 10:50 p.m. Friday at Eighth st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw. She died at 12:30 a.m. Saturday in Emergency Hospital.

The jury reached its decision after hearing directly contradictory testimony from two witnesses.

Samuel H. Cradle, 28, of the O street address, Mrs. Huntley's companion at the time of the accident, said they were walking from south to north across Pennsylvania ave. and that they were in the pedestrian crosswalk when hit by Ramey's car.

But Carl Hardison, 32, of 624 C st. nw., an eyewitness, said they were crossing the avenue from north to south and were outside the crosswalk when hit.

Betty Jeanne Bechtol, airline hostess and the general's companion the night of the accident, testified they were traveling 15 to 20 miles an hour.

"The general put on his brakes immediately," said Miss Bechtol, "but we didn't have a chance in the world to keep from hitting them."

Montgomery Implements Ober Law

County Council First State Unit To Act on Measure To Stop Subversion

Montgomery County yesterday set up the machinery to carry out provisions of the anti-subversive Ober Law on the local level.

Officials believe Montgomery is the first Maryland county to implement the state law. All local governmental units are required to do so.

The council's resolution follows specific steps outlined in the Ober Law, and gives these new powers to the County Personnel Board:

1. To hold hearings for employes accused of being subversive.

2. To investigate the loyalty of candidates for employment by determining whether or not they belong to subversive groups.

3. To refuse employment to job applicants and to fire employes where there is "convincing evidence" of disloyalty.

Defines Subversive

In its resolution, the County Council defined a "subversive group" as one "which engages in, abets, advises or teaches activities intended to overthrow, destroy, or alter . . . the constitutional form of the Government of the United States, of the State of Maryland, or of any subdivision thereof."

County Manager Irving McNayr said the Council's action was undoubtedly "expedited" by the William W. Hinckley case last June.

Hinckley, a county school teacher, was fired by School Superintendent Edwin W. Broome after he refused to tell the House un-American Activities Committee whether he was or was not a Communist.

McNayr pointed out that the machinery adopted yesterday now provides for a hearing in such cases.

The Council passed a second resolution providing for job reinstatement and other rights to employes who enter the armed forces.

Permanent employes who enter military service may now get their old jobs back if they make application for reinstatement within 90 days after discharge—and can still perform their old duties.

If the county job is reclassified or upgraded while the employe is in the service, he is entitled to return to the job under its new classification.

The Council agreed to hold a public hearing at 3 p. m. September 19 on its proposal to improve Cherry Tree ln., Hillmoor dr., Crestmoor cir. and Loraine ave. in the Woodmoor subdivision. The improvement would cost an estimated $88,453.

Wife of 1949 'Ideal Father' Also Gets Her Just Deserts

You can't beat those Snyders for family pride.

Samuel Snyder, 37, of 1202 Hamilton st. nw., was The Washington Post's Ideal Father of Greater Washington in 1949.

And yesterday, Mrs. Pat Snyder, his wife, became the "Mother of the Day" on television station WTTG.

All because the Snyder kids, all four of them, are proud of their parents.

Yesterday, after the WTTG program had been aired, Mrs. Snyder said she thought her kids—Elaine, 12, Sol, 10, Carolyn, 6, and Butch, 2—had felt the Ideal Father business was "kind of a letdown for me."

Elaine last Friday saw the "Okay Mother" program and she and the other kids sat down for a "quick letter" to "try for me—try to make me feel better."

Yesterday, the whole family was on hand when the program came on, and there, sure enough, was the Snyder letter, much of it in huge printing—efforts of Carolyn and Butch—telling the world what an okay mother was Mrs. Snyder.

So now the kids figure it's all even.

The Washington Post

QUEEN—Miss Marilyn Lee O'Neill, daughter of Vice Admiral and Mrs. Merlin O'Neill of the Westchester Apartments here, who has been chosen as queen of the 1950 President's Cup Regatta

Miss Marilyn Lee O'Neill, 21-year-old daughter of the commandant of the United States Coast Guard, will reign at the President's Cup Regatta.

Miss O'Neill, who lives with her parents, Vice Admiral and Mrs. Merlin O'Neill, at the Westchester Apartments, is a senior at the Bouve School of Physical Education in Boston, where she is president of the student government body.

Her selection as regatta queen was announced by the Washington Board of Trade yesterday. Miss O'Neill attended the Garrison Forest School in Garrison, Md. She is 5 feet 5 inches tall, has fair hair and blue eyes. She is interested in painting, yachting, tennis, art and swimming, and has won a first place for form and style in swimming.

The regatta, which will be held September 3 through September 24, on weekends, starts with canoeing races. The coronation is to be held September 7. Speedboat races for the President's Cup will be held on September 16 and 17.

Woman Poses For Leap, Then Halts

A neighborhood flurry was created at 2541 Thirteenth st. nw., yesterday when Mrs. Marguerite Ash, 25, climbed out on her third-story window ledge to "frighten her husband."

That was what police said Mrs. Ash told them was her reason. She never intended to jump, she said.

One report had it that her husband, Samuel Ash, 34, a painter, was shopping at the time and came back to see the screen removed from the window and his wife perched on the ledge.

Ash then reportedly went upstairs and found the door locked.

But about this time a police squad car and a patrol wagon had arrived and Mrs. Ash had retreated inside and was opening the door.

A number of neighbors gathered in front of the Ash house to watch the incident. After the police left they stood around talking about it for a while, then dispersed.

About 30 minutes later, police were called again to the Ash house. Neighbors reported the sounds of loud arguments emanating from the Ash apartment and called police.

Police on the scene on the second call said there was no need for police action and departed.

Purse Snatchers' Loot Runs From 35 Cents to $750

Pickings for pocketbook snatchers in the District last night ranged from 35 cents to $750.

Mrs. Hester E. Bergsten, 69, said a slender thief, hiding his face under his coat, stole her purse containing $750 she was going to send to her daughter in Long Island for a down payment on a house. The theft occurred near Mrs. Bergsten's house at 715 Shepherd st. nw.

Pvt. Edward White of the Tenth Precinct said her description of the thief closely matched that of a man who, a few hours earlier, stole 35 cents in a purse carried by Mrs. McDonald Kah, 54, near Mrs. Kah's home at 6210 8th st. nw.

St. Ann's Church To Hold Lawn Party

St. Ann's Catholic Church, 10th and N. Frederick sts., Arlington, will hold its fourth annual lawn party at 7 p. m. today.

Events include a train ride, pony ride and grab-bag for children, and games and refreshments for all attending. A washing machine and electric ironer will be given away as attendance prizes.

Hearing Set Friday On Smith Judgeship

The Senate District Committee has scheduled an open hearing for 3 p. m. Friday on Emory B. Smith's nomination to be judge of Municipal Court.

Smith, Washington Negro attorney, was named by President Truman to fill the last of three Municipal Court judgeships created last year by Congress.

4 New Polio Cases Listed In D. C. Area

Four new cases of infantile paralysis were reported yesterday in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Two of the new cases were in the District, bringing to 80 the number of polio cases in the District this year. This time last year there had been only 35 cases reported in Washington.

The latest District cases, both of whom were admitted to local hospitals Monday, are an 11-year-old boy from the 3000 block of 30th st. se., now at Gallinger Hospital, and a 5-year-old boy from the 5400 block of Kansas ave. nw., a patient at Children's Hospital.

Montgomery County reported its twenty-third polio case of the year, a 20-year-old woman from the 8700 block of Barron st., Takoma Park, Md. She was admitted yesterday to Gallinger Hospital.

Fairfax County reported its twenty-sixth case of the year, a 7-year-old child from the 1700 block of Fort Hunt rd., just south of Alexandria. The child has been admitted to Children's Hospital.

1131 Children Of School Age In Falls Church

The 1950 state school census of Falls Church shows 1131 children between the ages of 7 and 19 years living within city limits.

Superintendent Irvin Schmitt said the census figures gathered in July and August of this year disclosed that 818 city children, including 26 Negro students will attend the public schools this fall. A total of 297 Falls Church children will attend private schools this year, Schmitt said.

The census also disclosed a total of 1582 white pre-school children between the ages of one and six, and 19 Negro children in the same range living in the city. The city has 35 children handicapped by sight, hearing or speech defects.

Pepco Is Ordered To Present Cost Figures to PUC

Rate Case Hearing Postponed a Month; Transit Firm Pushes Fight Against Boost

By Richard Lyons
Post Reporter

The District Public Utilities Commission, hearing the Potomac Electric Power Co. rate case, yesterday ordered Pepco to submit figures showing the cost of servicing each class of customer.

PUC Chairman James H. Flanagan said he believed it was the first time that a utility company here has been required to submit its cost figures in a rate case.

Flanagan said the PUC was principally interested in the cost figures to find justification for the wide range in increases requested. Pepco wants to increase Capital Transit Co. streetcar power rates by 70.7 percent, District street lighting rates by 59.8 percent, but average residential rates by only 4.3 percent.

The proposed over-all increase for Washington, Maryland and Virginia is 9½ percent. This would total $3½ million in the next year.

Pepco's job consists of compiling and displaying publicly all the costs that go into the production and transmission of electricity and then allocating to each type of customer—residential, commercial, Capital Transit, etc.—the proportionate cost of serving it.

Hearing Resumes in Month

The request for cost figures came just after Pepco had concluded its case and while the PUC was considering when the hearings should be resumed for cross-examination. It decided to resume September 25 at 10 a. m., whether the cost survey is completed or not.

Observers said the injection of the cost question might mean a considerable delay in the PUC's decision on a possible rate increase. In any event, the company's hopes of putting new rates into effect September 20 were dashed.

Late yesterday afternoon, a Pepco spokesman said the company expects to have the cost figures ready by September 25. Earlier a Pepco official had been heard to say the job would take "months and months." When the survey is presented, a PUC official said, it "will of necessity be based on many assumptions that would be subject of attack by attorneys."

Yesterday's hearing, like Monday's, was spiced with numerous exchanges between Capital Transit and Pepco attorneys. Capital Transit has announced it will "fight every step of the way" against the requested increase in its rates.

Request For Figures

It was one exchange between Capital Transit Attorney Raymond Sparks and James F. Reilly of Pepco that led to the PUC request for cost figures.

Capital Transit has asked for all papers that went into the preparation of 30 exhibits Pepco presented. Representatives of the two companies will confer today on specific information that will be made available. Sparks asked for a six-week recess "to examine the vast amount of information that will be available to us—we hope."

Reilly protested that he had never heard of a rate case where six weeks were given to prepare for cross-examination. He added that Capital Transit had already been given "voluminous information."

Sparks retorted that one paper promised—"a study justifying the Capital Transit increase"—had not been received. Reilly said he didn't know of any such study. Then the PUC moved in.

At another point Pepco's rate engineer, Herbert F. G. Main, who testified all morning, admitted that Pepco first decided how much more Capital Transit should pay and then set new rates accordingly.

Sparks then offered a motion to dismiss the case on the grounds

Passenger Killed

Man Fined For Causing Ship Melee

James T. McKeamer, 23, was fined $200 yesterday for landing the blow which police said touched off the melee resulting in the fatal shooting August 12 of a man who dived off the excursion steamer Robert E. Lee.

McKeamer, of 824 25th st. nw., pleaded guilty to assaulting John Macon, 38, of 604 Keefer pl. nw. Sentencing was by Judge George D. Neilson, who ordered the defendant to serve six months in jail if the fine is not paid.

Police declared that the fight McKeamer started set off a free-for-all in which four shots were fired.

When the boat docked, police were waiting. As he swam in the water nearby, Leroy Davis, 37, was fatally shot by Detective Sergt. Lloyd B. Furr. The detective was exonerated by the coroner's jury.

Meanwhile, Judge Neilson held James S. Neverson, 25, of 2633 I st. nw., for hearing September 6 on a charge of assault with intent to kill during the brawl. Neverson, according to Detective Alfred F. Corfield, is being investigated to determine whether he fired the shots aboard the boat.

Gaming Count Holds 2; Their 'Slips' Showed

A chance gust of wind, or perhaps it was a nervous fumble, brought to light evidence which resulted in the arrest of two men yesterday on gambling charges, according to police.

The men, John Brown, 44, of 933 N st. nw., and Bainbridge Thornley, 36, of 1330 T st. nw., both of whom said they are laborers, were charged with operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips. They were released in $1500 bond each pending an appearance next Monday before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence.

Lieut. Roy Blick, head of the vice squad, said the arrests were made following a tip that two men in a car were taking numbers plays in the 1200 block of 7th st. nw.

Blick said that after cautiously observing operations for three days, vice squad detectives yesterday approached the car to question the men. It was then, Blick said, that a gust of wind or a nervous fumble by one of the men caused a large sack of numbers slips to spill on the floor of the car.

Beauty Contest Season Hits Police as Bride, 21, Joins Up

The new rookie is a 21-year-old policewoman appointee. Some restrained souls might feebly describe her as "beautiful."

Police reporters who know every crime adjective in the book, became almost inarticulate when they attempted to describe the charms of the new rookie, Mrs. Janet Lean Hamlin, of 10200 Ridgmoor dr., Silver Spring, Md.

Inspector Walter T. Storm, assistant superintendent of police in charge of personnel, agrees. He refused to permit news photographers to take pictures of the new recruit because he believes she will be of great value in undercover work.

It develops that Mrs. Hamlin, a Scotch lassie and a bride of little more than a week, is a happy combination of beauty and brains. She was graduated last June from the University of Maryland where she majored in a crime control curriculum.

She served an internship at the Federal Reformatory for Women at Alderson, W. Va., last summer.

Why did Mrs. Hamlin become a policewoman?

"I've been thinking about it ever since I was a kid," she explained. "Of course, I thought about it in a romantic light then. After college I took a more serious view of being a policewoman but I knew it was my chosen profession."

The new policewoman's last name was MacDonald until August 12 when she became the bride of David A. Hamlin, an investigator for the State Loan Co. of Rosslyn, Va.

After she was sworn in yesterday as the department's twenty-seventh policewoman she was given a badge, a .38-caliber service revolver, a copy of the police manual and a map of the city.

She has never fired a gun in her life, she admitted. But police officials said this will be remedied when Mrs. Hamlin attends a four-week course at the Police Training Academy in September.

After that, lawbreakers had best beware of a beauty carrying a handbag that bulges with the outline of a police .38.

Lane and Mahoney Exchange Charges

Baltimore, Aug. 21 (AP).—What kind of schools do you want for your children? Governor Lane asked Maryland Democrats today and told them the September primary would be their answer.

The Governor, running for renomination, said in a campaign statement that more is at issue than just to decide who will be the Democratic nominee.

"I am making the campaign for those who want good schools for their children, The best schools and teachers we can afford.

"I am making my campaign for those who want good roads, and who want our hospitals to be the equal of any in the country."

His principal opponent in the primary, George P. Mahoney, meantime, kept up his attack on the administration's financial policy—taxes are way too high, he insists—and continued his criticism of the State hospitals, where Lane says solid progres has been achieved during his Governorship.

Addressing himself directly to the Governor, Mahoney asked in his statement if it isn't true that "salaries paid to employes of your office totaled $28,000 in 1946 when you took office, and isn't it true that you increased this to $41,000 in 1950?"

Prince Georges

County Plans Exams for More Police

The Prince Georges County Commissioners yesterday ordered examinations for county police be held to establish an eligible list.

A special committee last week recommended that 16 new policemen be appointed and an existing vacancy be filled as part of a reorganization of the county force. The commissioners took no action on this yesterday.

The commissioners directed Mrs. Betty Tayman, clerk to the police board, to advertise for applications and to hold an examination at a later date. The applications must be presented before September 20. Blanks may be obtained at the Hyattsville or Upper Marlboro substations of the county police.

To be eligible the applicant must be a voter in the county, between 21 and 35 years and of good character. The present eligible list was abolished and new examinations must be taken by the 25 now on the list, the commissioners said.

In other actions, the commissioners awarded a contract for construction of a 36-foot reinforced concrete roadway with curbs, gutters and storm drainage for 1600 feet of Chillum rd. between Riggs rd. and the Greenlawn apartments near New Hampshire and Eastern aves. The low bidder, E. R. P. Smith of Hyattsville, who bid $44,833, was given the contract.

A delegation of five Riverdale women headed by Mrs. Margaret Mattingly appeared to oppose the county paying any share of the storm drainage construction work in Riverdale Heights, contending the residents there had asked for the work and should pay for it. No action was taken by the commissioners.

Police Alerted For Two Escapees From Fort Belvoir

Fort Belvoir spokesmen identified them as Pvt. Vincent H. Preisnitz, 18, of Rheinlander, Wis., and Pvt. Jack A. Martin, 20, of Detroit, Mich. Officers said the two men slipped away from the hospital while serving on a work detail.

Preisnitz was serving a six-month sentence in the Fort Belvoir stockade for going to sleep on guard duty, the Army said. Martin was serving a similar sentence for being absent without leave.

$300 Fine Set For Smoking In Hotel Beds

Henceforth, anyone causing a fire in a hotel, hospital, apartment and other multiple dwelling place "through carelessness or negligence" will be subject to a $300 fine. Establishments concerned will be required to post the regulation in the lobby.

Another regulation adopted requires owners of all buildings but private homes to report any fire on the premises to the fire department even though it is immediately put out. Fire Marshal R. C. Roberts said he recommended the regulation so firemen can make sure the fire is out and, in the case of repeated fires at the same address, can determine the cause.

Mrs. Young, Noted Social Leader, Dies

Mrs. Mary Shellabarger Young, 83, prominent in the civic and social life of Washington for 50 years, died yesterday at her home, 2212 R st. nw., after an illness of several months.

Born in Springfield, Ohio, Mrs. Young was the wife of John Hervey Young of Ohio and Washington. She was the daughter of the late Samuel Shellabarger, prominent in the Civil War Congresses and the early councils of the Republican Party, Minister to Portugal in the Grant Administration and for many years a member of the Washington bar as the senior partner of the law firm Shellabarger & Wilson.

Pepco Told To Show Costs

that Pepco had "failed to make a case for an increase in rates to Capital Transit or any other customer."

He added:

"We think their approach is typified by the last few words of Mr. Main that they assumed a certain increase to Capital Transit and set out to prove the validity by applying proposed high voltage rates. They seem to be running around in a circle."

An exhibit offered by Main showed that Pepco's average residential rates are among the lowest in the country. They are now fourth and with the proposed increase will still stand eighth among those in 34 cities of more than 250,000 population, the exhibit showed. Main gave no testimony on comparable figures for commercial or such special consumers as Capital Transit.

In justification of the large increase asked in street lighting rates, Main explained that present rates are based on 1930 prices. He also pointed out that though Congress by an act passed in 1911 limited to $5 Pepco's compensation for relocating a street light pole, the average cost of this operation today is $113.

"The company requests that steps be taken to have this legislation changed," Main said.

Capital Transit rates must be raised substantially in fairness to other consumers, Main said. Rates enjoyed by the transit company under a special contract are out of line with those charged other classes of customers and those charged for streetcar power in other cities, he maintained.

Fairfax Bond Suit Will Be Appealed

A suit challenging validity of more than 11 million dollars worth of Fairfax County bonds, overruled in the county's Circuit Court August 11, will be appealed to the Virginia Supreme Court.

Alfred J. Anton, attorney for the plaintiffs, said last night his clients had agreed to proceed with the case following a closed conference. Anton declined to say what steps will be taken to post a $20,000 bond set by the court after the complainants had indicated they would appeal.

The suit was brought by Paul Rhinehart, jr., of Dranesville and Charles Gardner, sr., of Herndon. They contended a public referendum which authorized bond issues for school improvements and a new courthouse addition was invalid because residents of two "annexable" zones were permitted to participate.

Rhinehart and Gardner contended that residents of the two disputed areas would not benefit by the bonds if pending annexation suits are successful and therefore should not have been permitted to participate in the election. If the appeal is carried forward it may delay sale of the bonds by as much as four months, according to attorneys for the county.

Former Airman, 33, To Be Buried Today

Capt. Gordon R. Manuel, 33, a former Air Force group bombardier, will be buried with full military honors today at 3 p. m. in Arlington Cemetery. He died last Wednesday of a cerebral hemorrhage in Guilford, Me.

Falls Church School Starts A Week Late

Falls Church's Madison-Jefferson School will open on Monday, September 11, instead of September 5 as originally scheduled, Superintendent Irvin Schmitt said yesterday.

Failure of workmen to complete a $50,000 remodeling job on the school caused the delay, Schmitt said.

The work includes plastering, painting, rewiring, remodeling of the principal's office and construction of partitions between halls and the cafeteria and auditorium.

Registration of pupils will be held Friday, September 8 as follows: Grades 1, 2 and 3 at 1 p. m. in the Madison auditorium; grades 4 and 5, 2 p. m. at the Jefferson School entrance; grades 6 and 7, 2 p. m. at the Madison cafeteria.

Children in grades 1, 2, 3, 6 and 7, who are unable to register Friday should appear in the Madison principal's office before school September 11. Grades 4 and 5 who register late should check in at the same time at the front entrance to the Jefferson school.

J. R. Gallagher, Drowning Victim, Burial Today

Funeral services for Jame R. Gallagher, 31, who was drowned Saturday in the Rappahannock river near Tappahannock, will be held today in Warsaw, Va.

Mr. Gallagher, a Washington streetcar conductor, lived at 1125 E st. ne. He is survived by his wife and five children, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Gallagher of Warsaw.

Falls Church Seeks $10,000 For Legal Costs

Falls Church City Manager Roy F. Braden was looking hard yesterday for a place to cut $10,000 from the city's budget to pay for unanticipated costs of the city's annexation suit.

The city lost a suit to annex 10.75 square miles of adjacent Fairfax land recently, but is planning an appeal from the verdict of a special three-judge panel in Fairfax Circuit Court.

Braden told a Monday night session of the city council that he might have to "cripple" some city departments in order to provide the extra $10,000. Yesterday, however, he said more optimistically that "there is more surplus than we anticipated" in the budget and that money might be drawn from these funds.

STICKNEY, ROBERT L., Jr. In loving memory of my brother, Bobby, who passed away two years ago today.
God couldn't spare an angel, so he sent us down a Star;
A part of His blue Heaven came to bless us from afar.
And though we had him with us, but just a few short years,
The glory of that blessing is shining through our tears.
We will not question why, dear God, you called your starlet home,
But thank You for Your kindness all the years he was our own.
SISTER SHIRLEY.

Diplomats Gather at Syrian Fete

By Elizabeth Maguire

THE cold snap yesterday pepped things up considerably, and society was as gay as Christmas. Diplomats, brides, the military, everything except debutantes, who are never unseasonal, went on a round of parties.

Diplomats Meet at Syrian Legation

MIDDLE EAST diplomats met at a party yesterday given by the Minister of Syria and Mme. El-Khouri at the Legation on Wyoming ave. Guests were received at 7 o'clock, and a buffet supper was served after cocktails.

In the gathering were the Ambassador of Egypt and Mme. Rahim, the Ambassador of Thailand and Princess Wan Waithayakon, the Ambassador of Pakistan and Mme. Ispahani, the Ambassador of Indonesia and Mme. Sastroamidjojo, the Minister of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and Mme. Haikal, the Charge d'Affaires of Afghanistan and Mme. Aziz, the Charge d'Affaires of Iraq and Mme. Bakr, Sheikh Ahmed Abdul Jabbar of Saudi Arabia, and Brig. N. A. K. Raza, Military Attache of Pakistan, and Mme. Raza.

There were many others, including George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State; John Simmons, Chief of Protocol; Raymond Hare; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Muir; Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, and Representative Frances P. Bolton.

The buffet included whole lambs stuffed with rice, kibbi balls of ground wheat and meat, turkeys, salads, and a Syrian pudding like our custard.

Diplomat's Wife Leaving for London

MRS. M. O. A. Baig, wife of the Pakistan Minister, is returning to London soon to start her sons off on their fall terms at college. A farewell party will be given by the Minister and Mrs. Baig at their apartment at the Shoreham on September 1 at 6:30 o'clock.

Munir Baig, their elder son, will enter Cambridge University in October, and Taimur Baig has two more years at Clifton College, where his mother and father met as students years ago.

Members of the United States Dental Corps and residental society attended a reception given yesterday by Comdr. and Mrs. William D. King and Dr. and Mrs. John C. Swearingen at the Medical Center Officers Club between 6 and 8 o'clock.

Guests included the Assistant Surgeon General of the Navy and Chief of the Navy Dental Corps, Admiral Spry O. Claytor, and Mrs. Claytor, Comdr. and Mrs. B. W. Oesterling, Comdr. and Mrs. E. G. Pollard, Capt. Charles F. Lynch, Capt. and Mrs. Walter Rehrauer, Comdr. and Mrs. K. O. Turner, and Comdr. and Mrs. A. R. Frechette.

Bride-Elect Guest at Shower

MISS ANNE DAVIS was honored yesterday at a bridal shower given by Miss Elizabeth Beauchamp Halley at the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Charles R. L. Halley of Chevy Chase. Miss Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd E. Davis, and Charles A. Camalier, jr., will be married September 5. Guests at yesterday's party included Mrs. Floyd E. Davis, jr., Miss Lucile Camalier, Miss Anne Almy Mearns, Miss Margaret Ann Gollan, Mrs. George A. DeWitt, jr. and Miss Susan Walsh, all members of the wedding party. Mrs. Davis, mother of the bride, and Mrs. Halley, mother of the hostess, were also guests.

FOR A FORMAL EVENING—Sweeping layers of pastel net, paneled in black chantilly lace, form the full-length skirt of this regal ball gown. The lace is repeated in the strapless bodice and a wide girdle of black velvet at the waist makes the voluminous skirt. Colors are white, champagne, pink or powder blue. In sizes 10 to 16, it is available at The Hecht Co.

Barbara Corrigan To Be Married

Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Corrigan of Great Neck, Long Island, N. Y., announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara Genevieve, to Day Thorpe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Hollin Hall, Alexandria, Va. The wedding will take place in October.

Miss Corrigan, who studied for a year at the Sorbonne, is a graduate of Eden Hall, Torresdale, Pa., and Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart. Her fiance is a graduate of Lawrenceville School and Yale University. He is a member of the University, Metropolitan and Chevy Chase Clubs in Washington.

Nylons Today 'Good as Ever,' Survey Shows

Although you often hear women say that nylon stockings are not as good as they were before the war, the fact of the matter is that nylon is as good as ever and stockings are even better.

That's the conclusion made by the textile laboratory of Good Housekeeping in a report on nylons published in the September issue. The article, based on a survey and tests, is called "The Truth About Nylon Stockings."

"The biggest trouble," says the article, "is that we ask two opposite things of the same stocking: filmy sheerness and day-to-day service."

According to the survey, three years ago only 17 out of every 100 pairs of nylons were the very sheer 15-denier variety. Such delicate stockings were saved for special occasions. Today, however, the number has jumped to 70 out of every hundred, and women wear the 15-deniers for every occasion.

The article reminds women that prewar nylons were almost entirely 30 or 40 denier, and hence twice or more as thick and strong as the 15-deniers. For that reason they wore longer.

As a solution to the problem, the editors recommend that women buy 30- or 40-denier stockings for everyday use, saving their more fragile 15-deniers for "best" occasions.

Jean Embrey Becomes Bride At Mt. Holly Baptist Church

Mount Holly Baptist Church was the scene of the wedding of Miss Jean Isabelle Embrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Embrey, and Clinton Smoot Lee, son of Fitzhugh Lee of Washington and the late Mrs. Lee, on August 12.

Mrs. Stewart Embrey of Washington was matron of honor and Thomas C. Lee served his brother as best man.

Newell—Leverone

Miss Anna Martha Leverone, daughter of Paul J. Leverone and Mrs. Anna E. Leverone of Washington, became the bride of Pfc. Harvey E. Newell, jr., USMC, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey E. Newell of Lynn, Mass., in the Catholic chapel at Camp Lejeune on August 10. The wedding was attended by members of both families.

Joseph B. Leverone gave his sister in marriage and Mrs. Marianna E. Cotton attended the bride as matron of honor. Harvey E. Newell served his son as best man.

Daseler—Joy

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Eugene Daseler are on a cross-country wedding trip following their marriage in Reno, Nev., on August 6. The couple will return to California in the fall, where the bride will enter her last year at Sacramento State College and Mr. Daseler will enter the School of Veterinary Medicine at the University of California College of Agriculture.

The bride, the former Miss Helen Maxine Joy, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis J. Joy, jr., of Arlington and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Daseler of Oroville, Calif.

Season Changing; Benefit Fashion Shows Are Back

One of the first benefit fashion shows of the season takes place Thursday at 7 p. m. at Broy-Hill, the estate of Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Broyhill in Arlington, Va.

Sponsored by the Arlington Rose Garden Foundation, the show will be presented in the gardens of the estate, and will be followed by dinner and dancing. It will feature the fall collection of Washington designer, Mme. Louise Brune, and will include custom designs for every occasion. Climax of the show will be a "Starlight Wedding," in which the bride's gown and those of her attendants will be of ice-blue satin, sprinkled with brilliants.

ITU Auxiliary Sees Fashion Show

Wives of officials and members of the International Typographical Union, here for the group's 92d annual convention, were guests of honor at a fashion show and luncheon yesterday at the Statler Hotel.

Hostesses were members of the ITU's Women's Auxiliary of Washington, Number 13. The 1 p. m. event took place in the Congressional Room. Jelleff's presented the fashion show which included fall and winter clothes.

Red Cross Helps

'Lifeline' for Servicemen Held in Women's Hands

By Norma Lanum

FIVE days a week Mrs. Lester Cohen is a typical Chevy Chase housewife and mother—"just very average," she'll tell you.

But for the other two days it's a different story. Every Tuesday and Friday she helps "maintain the life line" between servicemen or veterans and their families.

Mrs. Cohen, wife of a radio and television attorney, is a volunteer Red Cross worker charged with recruiting and training the corps of Social Welfare Aides who solve monthly hundreds of vital personal problems. A worried soldier hasn't heard from his wife in two months . . . The needy wife of a sailor on sea duty no longer is receiving her allotment checks . . . A visiting serviceman has lost his wallet and has no way to get back to his base.

Problems Come From All Over

THESE are typical of the problems that pour in from all sections of the country for the welfare aides to untangle.

The messages, transmitted by Red Cross field workers, are received on the teletype machine in the basement of the Corcoran Gallery of Art where the Social Welfare Aides maintain their headquarters. Or they come in over the phone from Red Cross headquarters across the street.

The basement also serves as a kind of warehouse for left-over paintings from the gallery's crowded walls. So instead of the usual office calendars, maps and flower pots, the Red Cross ladies have huge gilt-framed paintings from the masters on the burlap covered walls of their offices.

As soon as a message of distress is received one of the aides gets to work on it. She may visit the family of the worried soldier and return a "home condition" report via the teletype machine. She may arrange to lend the needy service wife enough for daily expenses until her allotment payments are resumed. Or, she may advance the stranded serviceman enough money to get back to his base.

Often the most vital problems are taken care of within a few hours. Take, for instance, the soldier from a nearby Army post who went to his commanding officer last week for emergency leave to Washington. The reason? His wife was sick at Walter Reed Hospetal.

His commander contacted the local Red Cross field director, who in turn wired a message to the social welfare service of the Washington chapter. One of the volunteer aides contacted Walter Reed Hospital, found that the soldier's wife had undergone a serious operation and that there was no one to take care of her two small children. Within 12 hours the soldier was granted his leave and was on his way to Washington to help out at home until his wife recovered.

Tan Goes With Her Uniform

WHEN SHE is not helping solve other persons' problems, Mrs. Cohen is most likely to be found at the golf course or swimming pool of the Woodmont Country Club. That's where she got that deep tan that looks so beautiful with her blue Red Cross volunteer uniform.

Mrs. Cohen always has been generous with her free time. While her 12-year-old son was attending Chevy Chase Elementary School, she worked in the library and school cafeteria, and besides that, she managed a Cub Scout troop for two years.

A great believer in volunteer social work, Mrs. Cohen is encouraging other "average" housewives and mothers to join her staff, contributing just as many hours a week as they can spare. Her staff includes 14 aides now, but she hopes to have 30 by winter.

The Washington Post

HUNDREDS of servicemen's problems are solved monthly by Mrs. Lester Cohen (left) and her staff of Red Cross Social Welfare Aides. Messages of distress from servicemen—or veterans—and their families are received from all sections of the country in the Red Cross offices in the basement of the Corcoran Art Gallery. A welfare aide is assigned to each problem, solves it, and then sends the answer back to the inquirer. Mrs. William E. Cole, a volunteer aide, is seated at the teletype machine where messages are received and answered

MRS. STEWART MURRAY JOY was Miss Ellen Pope Beam before her marriage August 19 in Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral. MRS. JAMES RAY MORGAN is the former Miss Beverley Grayce Shertzer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Courtney Shertzer of Washington. Her husband is the son of Mrs. Margaret Copeland of Houston, Tex. The wedding took place yesterday in the Full Gospel Tabernacle, the Rev. B. E. Mahan officiating. The bride wore a gown of candelight satin with a finger-tip veil of illusion. After a wedding trip in Maryland and through the middle West, the couple will reside in Springfield, Mo., where Mr. Morgan attends the Central Bible Institute and Seminary. Following his graduation next year, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan plan to go to India as missionaries

Bachrach

MRS. JOSEPH LEE HERSON is the former Miss Sonia Maxine Stirman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Stirman of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Herson, also of Washington. The wedding took place August 6 in the Statler Hotel, Rabbi Metz and Cantor Barkin officiating. Following a wedding trip to New York and Bermuda, the couple will live in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Herson attended Maryland university

Miss Wentworth Becomes Engaged To Lee E. Fickle

The Rev. and Mrs. C. D. Wentworth of Augusta, Me., announce the engagement of their daughter, Dorothy Helen, of Washington, to Lee Edward Fickle of Arlington, son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd S. Fickle of Mulberry, Ind.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Wife's Kin Urge Her to Leave Loafer Husband And Start Anew; Loafer and His Dad Ask One More Chance for Him; Wife Can't Make Up Mind

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 42, married 17 years, and have been employed all my married life, with the exception of time off to have one child. My husband is 47, hasn't been employed for nearly two years, and he no longer seeks work, because it is humiliating, he says, to be turned down due to age.

Both families objected to our marrying. Mine objected because of his family's dubious reputation and Sam's job changing. He hadn't held any job longer than three months. His family objected because I was poor and hadn't a college education. However, we were much in love and "love conquered all." At first it seemed we had an ideal marriage.

We worked hard in a business we started; and although Sam's family interfered, we were reasonably happy. After some years, Sam's mother exposed him in a frightening escapade,—saying she did it to save him from himself. At first I wouldn't believe the story; then he got involved in a money shortage and asked my help, swearing he had learned a lesson. We were five years paying off, and in this time I bore a child and continued to work.

Wife Guards Bits of Property

THE YEARS show a repetitive pattern of failure. We work and save and get enough money for Sam to start a business venture. Then after a few years he lapses into a negligent attitude, and piece by piece we sell the properties that make a home, to quiet his creditors. We have reached that slump again. All I have are some antiques left me recently by a grandsire and a few pieces of heirloom jewelry. Sam thinks we should sell them to give him another start.

Anna finishes school next year and my family thinks it high time I made a new start, with her, away from Sam. I yearn to agree with them, but he and his father beg me to give him one more chance. If I do, and he fails again, we may be homeless, with my savings exhausted, and Sam no nearer mature behavior. Am I unduly materialistic in wanting to hold on to my home for Anna and myself? Is legal separation justified, so we can have peace in the home I am maintaining? Please advise.

E. L.

Miracle Seems Unlikely Here

DEAR E. L.: Character is the stamp of individuality impressed by nature, education and habit—especially habit. It is the aggregate of distinctive qualities belonging to an individual. And according to your story, one of Sam's outstanding character traits is unfitness to handle money or tend to business. In practice he is self indulgent, undisciplined and childish, it seems; not hard working, thrifty and persevering, as you have been in maintaining him.

At Sam's age, revolutionary changes of character don't take place overnight; indeed they seldom happen at all, and when they do, they are a self induced miracle, not the product of somebody's pampering. And I don't think you should bet on a miracle here.

It is one thing to forgive Sam his past blunders. You should do that, since hard feelings never solved anything. But it would be something else again to grant him a free hand with the last of your negotiable holdings. If he won't learn from experience, the challenge to do so passes to you. As matters stand, your character faces a crucial test. You would be weak where Sam is wilful, if you were to give him "another chance" on the terms he wants, when you feel sure—and you definitely do—that it means signing for another loss.

She Backs Away From Facts

YOU say you yearn to act on your family's advice and make a new start, without Sam running the show. But I rather think the opposite is true. You have difficulty rejecting Sam's sales talk for the reason that you want to lean on him (or somebody), and unconsciously you cling to the hope that he may straighten up yet and spare you the trouble of taking control. Your conscious mind is wearily aware that he is a plausible wastrel; but your emotions are still geared to wishful thinking about him, and that's why you feel stymied.

Now, to meet your questions: 1. Certainly you aren't unduly mercenary in wanting to stay out of debt, hold on to your home, etc. That is being a good citizen, not a drag on society. 2. As to whether you are entitled to a legal separation in defense of your rights, I wouldn't know, until Sam has reacted to a stand that you haven't yet taken. Until you've frankly rejected his wheedling, and firmly refused to risk the last of your properties in a gamble, you haven't begun to unravel the problem. M. H.

Stepmother's Role Demands Love

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

LET'S be frank enough to admit that the role of a step-parent is made difficult by the obvious fact that the children she is called upon to mother are not her own. Any child may test the patience of its own mother. Given this same behavior, the step-mother sometimes reacts with anger and dislike, because she does not love the child and the child knows it.

Mrs. I. S. writes, "My stepchildren, 10 and 11, are completely out of hand and always doing the wrong thing. I do not whip them as I fear to hurt them, but I do make them go to bed or sit in a chair.

"They are very jealous of the two younger children. They feel these two should be expected to do as much as they do, although they are just babies. I only ask them to take care of their clothes, make the beds, and dry the dishes. They argue and fight and won't do anything until asked three or four times.

"We have tried to improve their table manners. We haven't progressed much with that. I cook good meals. I keep their clothes clean and see that they are in bed by 10 p. m. I have tried being extra nice, not complaining and punishing, but have failed. What shall I do?"

I feel sure as you read this you yourself will see the answer. You have been conscientious, but you have never convinced these children that they are meaningful to you as persons. They are individuals who get your care, but not your love. Naturally, they are jealous of the younger children who are your own and whom you love.

You could work a miracle in their behavior if you truly liked them and showed it.

It is poor punishment to put children to bed for misbehavior. Bed should be a refuge from fatigue, not a jail. You have chosen all the monotonous tasks for the children to do, instead of giving them some choice in their household tasks, and thus inspiring them to do them well and not with resentment.

Try to show them real affection. Begin to look at them as two motherless children who need to feel that they have a real place in the home—not as boarders but as part of the family.

Sportsmanship

However pleasant people are . . . Or friendly is their grip . . . There is no stronger bond than that . . . Of honest sportsmanship . . . Of playing fair in every game . . . No matter what the stakes . . . And being quietly resigned . . . When others get the breaks . . . There is no need to sacrifice . . . Or throw the ball away . . . Or give the least assistance to . . . The rival in a fray . . . The only thing is not to cheat . . . By any means at all . . . Or take undue advantage of . . . A fumble or a fall . . But just to struggle onward with . . . A true and steady aim . . . And earn the letters that will spell . . . A good and worthy name.

"How my mind was changed—when I took the clothes off the line. They felt so soft—as soft as any wash I've ever had with three rinsings. They smelled nice and sweet, and looked so gleaming clean! Why, usually I have to use bleach to get shirts so white."

"I was practically dazzled by the brightness of the colored things . . . and I was delighted with the way they came up so crisp and fresh with ironing. No more long, hard washdays for me—I'm washing the easiest, and the best way, now—with No-Rinse Surf."

Tricky Crust Perks Up Pie

DID you ever see anything trickier than the trim around the edge of that pie? Even more unusual is its filling, made with onions and bacon! This pie is to be served as a main dish—a very filling one that will make a complete supper along with a crisp salad and cool dessert.

ONION PIE

1½ pounds white onions, peeled and sliced
2 cups sour cream
2 eggs, lightly beaten
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
⅛ teaspoon nutmeg
⅛ teaspoon ginger
1 recipe plain pastry
Paprika
Caraway seed

Saute bacon. Slice and add onions and cook 10 minutes. Combine with sour cream and eggs. Add seasonings and turn into pastry-lined, 9-inch pie pan. Dust with paprika and sprinkle with caraway seed. Bake in hot oven (425 degrees Fahrenheit) 10 minutes; reduce heat to 350 degrees Fahrenheit and bake 20 minutes longer, or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. This pie will serve six. (The edging is made by cutting a strip of dough and arranging it in a series of loops around the edge of the pie pan.)

Sagging Chair Seats Can Be Revived by Additional Padding and New Webbing

DEAR ANNE:
I am redoing the black leather seats of my old dining room chairs with a striped damask. The seats sag a little in the middle and I would like to know if I can pad them or what before covering, and how to do it?
D. R., Washington.

Have you checked on what padding was used under the leather in the chairs originally? This is what you should get when you buy more to build them up. A firm selling such upholstery materials can be reached by telephoning District 7447. If the seats have a webbing foundation, it may be that the webbing needs tightening or replacing, too, to take out the sags.

DEAR ANNE:
The Braham Woolen Mills of Braham, Minn., washes and recards old woolen cloth into 1- to 4-pound batts at little cost. They will put it into cheese cloth bags ready for one's own cover for wool-filled comforters or quilts at additional charge.
H. S. W., Clinton, Md.

Thanks, H. S. W. We're still looking for a firm that actually makes the old wool into new blankets.

DEAR ANNE:
A cup of coffee was spilled on gray wall-to-wall carpeting. I sponged it off with cold water, but a brown stain remains. Can that be removed without damaging the carpet color? I have plenty of extra pieces to test a spot remover on, if you can suggest one to try.
Helyer W. Kreger, Hyattsville, Md.

Try a soapless detergent on the spot. Put 1 teaspoonful of it in a jar with ½ pint lukewarm water. Stir vigorously until you have obtained a clear, watery solution with no residue. The amount of suds, incidentally, has no bearing on the effectiveness of the formula.

Apply this mixture to the stain with an eye dropper. Using a rotary motion, sponge the stained area with a clean, white unstarched cloth, beginning at the outer edge and working in. Try to keep inside the stained area at all times, and complete the treatment by lightly sponging in the direction the pile lies. Finally, with another cloth dampened in clean, lukewarm water, sponge the area again several times.

Use this treatment on the rug as soon as possible, for the longer the stain stays in, the harder it will be to get out. It's only fair to warn you that it may be impossible to remove all the coffee color.

DEAR ANNE:
I noticed someone wrote your column the other day about mending tears in ninon or dotted swiss curtains. As far as darning them goes, I have found a piece of white nylon stocking makes a wonderful foundation for it on such thin fabrics. I bought a cheap pair of these and cut out a piece to mend a curtain. It worked beautifully and I've been using them for similar fine darns ever since. It's the best thing I've seen short of the curtain material itself and I didn't have any of that.
A. W., Washington.

DEAR ANNE:
Recently, there appeared an article in your column on weaving at home. Can you give me the date on which it appeared?
E. M. K., Washington.

We carried a question and answer on weaving classes in the Tuesday, August 1, issue. Since then we've been told of still another teacher of weaving. She lives at 1423 34th st., nw, and can be reached by telephoning Hudson 8616.

DEAR ANNE:
I wonder if you or your readers know of any amateur singing group devoted to singing madrigals and church music, which rehearses outside business hours. I do not wish to join a church choir. I am a woman who has had experience in choir work and some individual voice instruction, and can read music.
N. M. N., Washington.

I have heard that there is—or used to be—a mixed group of such singers in Chevy Chase but don't know how to get in touch with them. Perhaps some reader has a suggestion.

Your Figure, Madame

'Age Is Personal as a Bank Account'

By Ida Jean Kain

LETTERS are still rolling in, giving highly-spiced opinions on the ever-interesting subject of women versus age.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: "I think as a rule women do mind telling their correct age. I'll soon be 40, but I don't think it's anybody's business except my own. While I've never hidden my age and have always answered truthfully when asked, I still resent the question. Actually, I feel that one's age is as personal as one's bank account. I can't understand how acquaintances, or even friends, could be so 'nervy' as to inquire into the state of either."

TO TELL IS AGING: "Never tell age! The power of the spoken word is such that hearing one's age is depressing. Even if you don't look your age, you do after you've told it. I've settled on an age to give to doctors, etc. . . . and I find it helps to think I really am that age."

IT ALL DEPENDS: "If you're 40 or 50 and over, and looking for a job . . . sister, keep your age to yourself! No matter how capable you are or how young you look, the mention of years past 30 puts you on the shelf. However, if you're the glamorous center of attention in a social group and the question of age comes up, then quite frankly state your age. When you know you don't show it and look 10 years younger . . . well, then, sister, enjoy yourself!"

KEEP UP APPEARANCES: "The average woman does not mind getting old . . . only looking it. A youthful appearance is a powerful advocate in the business world as well as socially. There is only one way for the woman (or man) of advanced age to repair the ravages of time—facial and brow wrinkles, fallen face, flabby throat—and that is plastic surgery. Why is this science not more thoroughly investigated? A repaired face, like a repaired car or house, is vastly improved. 'Youth must be served' is the modern cry. How much more needed is the service to age."

THE BEST IS YET TO BE: "I think women dislike telling their age because of fear. This gnawing fear women harbor in their hearts is a false notion that beauty is tied up with physical appearance and that the ravages of age will wrench the torch of beauty from their grasp. But beauty is ageless and timeless . . . it is ethereal.

"When we women have passed the 40-year line, most certainly we are leaving our first fresh youth behind, but not necessarily our beauty . . . nor yet youth itself. Let us not look backward with regret, but rather forward with anticipation for the new relay of youth. There will be compensation for the loss of first youth. Experiences of great variety have gone into those 40 years of living, from which comes a priceless fruit—wisdom. These seedlings of wisdom earned from living can again bear fruit. They can be the keys that open a never-ending chain of rich personal vistas."

Cooking Cues

A colorful and delicious salad is made by marinating diced cooked beets in a tangy French dressing and then serving them on salad greens with thin slices of hard-cooked eggs. Be sure to add a little onion juice to the dressing before pouring it over the beets.

Adding a teaspoon or two of paprika to the seasoned flour in which you dip chicken for frying or baking helps to give the chicken pieces a rich brown color after they are cooked.

Snap beans are just as good cold as they are hot. To use them in salad mix them with a little French dressing and serve them with thin crisp onion rings.

For a quick fresh fruit dessert, alternate orange slices with quartered fresh dates; serve with custard sauce.

Cold Salmon Platter — New Thousand Island Dressing
Medley of Summer Vegetables — Hard Rolls
Fruit Cup — Beverage

NEW THOUSAND ISLAND DRESSING

Ingredients: 1 cup commercially prepared sour cream, 1 hard-cooked egg (mashed through fine strainer), ¼ cup finely diced celery, ¼ cup chili sauce, 1 tablespoon finely diced pimiento-stuffed olives, ¼ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon finely grated onion.

Method: Mix all ingredients together gently but well. Chill for several hours or overnight before using. Makes 1½ cups.

Sure-Fire Dish Prepared in Jiffy

CHIPPED BEEF AU GRATIN
1 pkg. frozen spinach
1 3-oz. jar chipped beef
1 10½-oz. can condensed cream of mushroom soup
½ cup milk
½ cup grated Am. cheese

Start oven at 350 F. or moderate. Next, cook the spinach according to directions on the package. When cooked, drain well and place spinach in bottom of a medium (1 quart) casserole. Now pull the beef apart and place half of it right on top of spinach.

Mix up the mushroom soup with the milk and pour half only over the spinach and chipped beef. Place remainder of beef on top of soup, add rest of the soup and sprinkle with the cheese on top of that. Bake 20 minutes. Serves from 4 to 6.

Tobe Says...

Sheath Coat Translates The Slim Silhouette

At the other end of the fashion pole from the pyramid coat that I discussed recently, is the sheath coat—a very smart fashion that will probably find only a limited acceptance this fall. It is just what its name implies—a straight slender column of a coat usually worn wrapped to the side.

The sheath coat is utterly sophisticated, the perfect "dressy" coat for a social life in town. It's smartest in fairly dressy fabrics too — velvet and velveteen, the new duvetyn surface wools, or one of the semi-casual tweedy wools that look dressy when used in dark street colors.

Montgomery Fair Opens; 160 Exhibits Judged

The Montgomery County Fair opened yesterday in a drizzling rain, but the judging of household exhibits from cake to patchwork quilts went off on schedule inside the giant new fieldhouse at Gaithersburg.

More than 160 exhibitors showed 800 articles in the women's exhibits.

Scheduled to visit the fair this afternoon are a group of eight Austrian journalists who are touring the United Staes to learn about American life.

The journalists, who are visiting the agricultural research center at Beltsville this morning, are traveling at the expense of the Rockefeller Foundation and are sponsored by the University of Missouri School of Journalism. During their visit to Washington this week they are guests of The Washington Post.

Today, Ayrshires, Jerseys, Milking Shorthorns, sheep, poultry, rabbits, and farm produce will be judged beginning at 10 a. m. At 8:30 p. m., Marines from the Quantico Base will box a team of D. C. National Guardsmen.

Thursday, judging of cattle will continue at 10 a. m. with swine judging at 9 a. m. A baseball game between the County All-Stars and the Upper Montgomery All-Stars will be played at 8:30 p. m.

Angus, Hereford, and Shorthorn cattle will be judged at 10 a. m. Friday, draft horse teams at 10:30 a. m. and a horse-pulling contest starts at 8:30 p. m.

On Saturday, a horse show featuring hunters, jumpers and saddle horses will begin at 10 a. m. and conclude at 10 p. m.

Resulting of yesterday's judging:

Mrs. Robert Brown, Brookeville, best canned collection; Mrs. Merhle King, Germantown, vegetable collection; Mrs. A. O. Etter, Rockville, most awards on pickles.

Mrs. L. E. Colby, Rockville, chiffon cake, plus the special Betty Crocker award of a silver-plated cake plate; Mrs. James D. King, Germantown, angel cake; Mrs. Nellie Hewitt Fritz, Silver Spring, chocolate frosted cake.

Mrs. Charles King, Gaithersburg, loaf of bread and parkerhouse rolls; Mrs. Garner Duvall, Boyds, mince pie; Mrs. Edwin D. Fry, Laytonsville, hooked rug, cut pile; Mrs. Clarence Day, Clarksburg, hooked rug, uncut pile.

Mrs. Alice Hostetler, Rockville, crocheted rug; Miss Cora Cleber, Boyds, braided rug; Mrs. Edwin D. Fry, Laytonsville, antinque silk and cotton quilts; Mrs. L. E. Smith, Gaithersburg, patched work quilt; Miss Ruth Baer, Boyds, appliqued quilts.

Miss Ruth Watkins, Germantown, crocheted bedspreads; Mrs. Arthur Ewell, Gaithersburg, knitted bedspreads and needlepoint; Mrs. Vernon Duvall, hemstitched and embroidered luncheon sets; Miss Emma Muncaster, Miss Edythe Turner and members of the Homemakers Club had educational booths in the building.

Among girls' exhibits, both the Lewisdale Girls 4-H Club and the Colesville Girls 4-H Club won blue ribbons. Individual prizes included the suit made by Miss Patricia Lynch, the evening dress by Miss Joyce Riggs, the angel food cake by Miss Patricia Messer, rolls by Miss Marilyn Mumford and baking powder biscuits by Miss Betty Jo Wear.

BETTE WOODRUFF, thrush at the Carlton's Congo Room, started her career with a telephone call.

BETTE

Last April she phoned the Wardman Park's bandleader, Glen Williams, just to let him know that she would like to sing for him if he ever needed a singer. Two weeks later, Patty Lane became ill, and Williams called Bette in a hurry.

That was the tall brunette's first experience. In the singing world, that is. She had been a model for years, also a secretary.

The fill-in job at the Wardman Park was a big help later when there was an opening in Basil Fomeen's band at the Carlton. The two hotels, owned by the same corporation, switch their musicians sometimes. And when Fomeen's band was booked for the summer, Bette's manager sent her over to talk to the hotel people.

Bette went from modeling to singing on the advice of friends. As she was preparing for shows about town, she would always be singing. Her friends thought she was good enough to do it professionally, and she finally decided to take thier advice and try. The Shoreham's Barnee Breeskin has been training her. She says she likes both careers, but the singing is better.

Modeling is still in the picture, though. Shows for Jelleff's take up Bette's time during the day—that and keeping house for her husband. But she doesn't mind keeping so busy, says, "I just enjoy knocking myself out."

Enjoying working for Fomeen—even on that schedule—is understandable. The accordion-playing Russian is a favorite with those around him. The men in his band consider him a real musical genius. They are impressed with his constant composing activities, the original pieces they play that blend in so well with dance music. And the band itself manages to be soft and danceable yet different.

Fomeen is paternal and sentimental about both his band members and the people he's playing for. He twirls the ends of his mustache, cocks his head, grins down at people. The accordion seems the perfect instrument for him, but Fomeen also plays the congo drum and a novachord of his own design.

Two members of his band play the violin, the clarinet and the saxophone each. There's also a pianist, a bass fiddler, a drummer and a flute-saxophone man.

After Crash Behind Red Lines

Officer Rides 'Gook' to Safety

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter
(Third in a Series)

It's just possible that the dizziest deed performed in the air over battle-torn Korea has been achieved not by one of those jet-propelled skyguys, but by an artilleryman.

The amazing airborne adventure of Second Lieut. Donald P. Bazzurro, 23, of Staten Island, New York City, occurred after his own artillery unit had been so mauled up north of Taejon, that Don found himself subbing for the artillery observer in a Piper Club plane.

The first day up was fine, but the second day up—on July 19—a North Korean Yak "snuck" up and sprayed the little ship with machine gun fire. The pilot, First Lieut. William Dusell of Wisconsin Dells, Wis., went into a spin in hope of shaking off the Yak. The ruse was too effective, for with the controls shot up, the Piper Cub failed to come out of the spin and smashed into a hillside 5 miles behind the enemy line.

Thought Dive Phony

"I figured it was a phony dive," said Lieutenant Bazzurro, evacuated from Korea to Walter Reed Hospital here, "and didn't worry about it."

It was only the split second before the plane, falling 2000 feet at around 120 miles per hour, smashed into the hillside that Bazzurro realized that the spin was the real thing, and then it was too late to worry about it.

Both pilot and observer survived the crash. The pilot, Lieutant Dusell, suffered a broken back, but managed to crawl into the weeds. Lieutenant Bazzurro came out of it with a leg smashed in three places. Bazzuro urged Dusell to stay hidden until he could crawl to friendly lines and get help. Dusell nodded assent and promptly passed out.

Bazzurro figured he'd better climb the hill and get his bearings. It was a long grind . . . maybe half a mile . . . with Don crawling it all the way. Just as he got to the top, he spotted a sniper sunning himself beside a rock.

The Washington Post
LIEUT. BAZZURRO
. . . from Korea

"I couldn't shoot him," said the lieutenant, "because a shot might bring more Red Koreans to the spot. I couldn't let him see me. And I felt I couldn't drag myself all the way down the hall after the long crawl up, without finding out where our lines were."

Two-Hour Watch

For two hours Lieutenant Bazzurro lay in the brush watching the Korean sunning himself and meanwhile desperately calculating what his next step should be.

Then the Korean, a short, stocky fellow, momentarily wandered off his post, leaving his rifle behind. Don hopped out of his hiding place, moved the Korean's rifle two feet over to a clump of grass and himself dropped into the grass.

The Korean came back, and without ado reached for his rifle. Bazzuro, a wiry 150-pounder, seized the Korean's outstretched wrist, yanked him off balance, and before the Korean could say "Okay"—the sum total of his English vocabulary—Don's .45 automatic was jammed into the Korean's neck.

When Bazzurro let go of the Red soldier's arm, the Korean bowed wordlessly, as if awaiting the coup de grace. The lieutenant ignored the invitation—a shot would still arouse the enemy around him—and momentarily scanned the horizon to glimpse the direction of Taejon.

Made Him Hostage

The youthful artillery officer decided it would be safest to take the prisoner along with him. So, with the Korean in front, and Don in back, the two made their way down the hill. Don was in terrible pain by the time they reached the bottom. He couldn't crawl another foot.

"At this point, I came up with an idea," Bazzurro commented matter of factly. "I decided to try for our lines aboard the gook's back."

By the dint of some arm waving and menacing gestures with the gun, Bazzurro got the Korean to understand what was wanted of him, and pronto the two were off, Don sitting on the Korean's shoulders, with the pistol cocked at the Korean's head.

The North Korean was thoroughly cooperative. Several times when Don pointed the direction, the Red soldier balked and cried "Boom, boom!" That was his way of telling his captor that Don's direction led through an area under artillery fire. Once, fearing a trap, Bazzurro ignored the Korean's advice, and insisted he be carried through a field as he directed.

Big Boom-Boom

"The gook was right," recalled Bazzurre. "The area proved to be under artillery fire and turned out to be very much boom-boom."

The airborne artilleryman completed the five-mile return trip to friendly lines in the record piggy-back time of eight hours. He turned his prisoner over to the authorities, and the lieutenant was taken to a medical aid station.

There, he discovered that the pilot, Lieut. Dusell, had beaten him back. Dusell had come to, and on sighting a 12-year-old Korean boy prowling around, had scratched out a note and sent it with the boy toward the American lines. The kid brought a patrol back to the spot to rescue the lieutenant, but the boy was himself fatally wounded by a sniper on the return trek.

Back to Reed

A few days later, Don arrived at Walter Reed Hospital via air evacuation.

Lieut. Bazzurro likes the Army life, wants to stay in. He considers his combat injury just one of those things.

He wanted to be a flier, and got into the Army Air Corps in 1945, fresh out of high school. But World War II was over before Bazzurro could get into the air. He then went to Wagner College for a year, and reenlisted in the Army in the fall of 1946. He'd seen service in Alaska and had risen to staff sergeant, when he was commissioned two years later and sent to Japan as an artillery officer.

Bazzurro believes that the men who went into Korea with him weren't much interested in such things as democracy versus Communism, the status of the United Nations, etc. He explained:

"At first we laughed when we heard about the South Koreans retreating. Then we were humiliated when we had to retreat, too. Then we got mad, and found ourselves fighting for our lives, and we didn't have time to think."

Arlington Parents Map Fight Against School Transfer Plan

About 45 irate parents of youngsters scheduled to attend Arlington's Marshall School by bus this fall asked the County School Board last night to allow their children to remain at Yorktown School.

The group was concerned about 80 children in the north end of the county who, it said, will face adjustments to four different schools within a period of several years under the proposed plan.

The children were shifted from Lee and Stewart Schools to the new Yorktown School last February. The school board proposed shifting them to Marshall this fall and then to another proposed new school in 1951.

Warren Clardy of 6309 N. 26th st., said the group has pledged a fund and consulted a lawyer. Some members "would like to go to court and try it through the newspapers," said Clardy, adding that "feeling is running high in our area."

The group asked that some youngsters, who live within walking distance of the Marshall School but will attend Yorktown School under present plans, be moved back to Marshall. This would make room for the group's own children.

The school board agreed to decide the matter at a special meeting Saturday morning in the Thomas Jefferson School, 816 S. Fillmore st.

At last night's meeting, the board also was informed by Glenn Hass, new director of instruction for the school system, that he was setting up a council on instruction among the Arlington school teachers. He said the council would contain representatives of each school in the county, plus some supervisors and principals and would meet monthly to formulate basic instructional policy.

The board also voted to pay the Federal Government $107 a month rent for school space at the Shirley Homes Project, plus $80 monthly for similar space at Pickett Homes, despite its previous objection to paying for space it was allowed for nothing last year.

Alexandria Starts Drive Against Drunks

Alexandria City Council last night made a preliminary move towards ridding the city's downtown section of "obnoxious drunks and loiterers."

At the suggestion of Councilman Leroy Bendheim, the Council appointed a four-man committee to confer with "appropriate authorities" on means of abating the nuisance which has brought numerous protests from downtown businessmen.

At the suggestion of council members, the committee will confer with representatives of the Virginia Alcohol Beverage Control Board, with a view to closing "disreputable" taverns; officials of the city's court, in an effort to bring sterner punishment for chronic offenders, and with law enforcement officials, to ask more vigorous policing.

The council also authorized City Manager Ancell to negotiate for the lease of two lots to be used in the first step of a program to provide free off-street parking for the downtown area.

Council agreed to waive, for the rest of the year, a city license tax on candy vending machines sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. The exemption was granted after officials of the organization explained that proceeds from the machines would be used for charitable and civic projects.

County Plans Use of Jail For Court

The Arlington County Board last night agreed in principle to convert the old county jail for use in juvenile court and domestic relations work.

The board asked County Manager A. T. Lundberg to find out how much it would cost to carry out the conversion plan submitted by Judge Hugh Reid of Arlington County Court.

The meeting at the county courthouse was in the form of an open conference during which the board takes no final action.

Located adjacent to the courthouse, the old jail will become available for other use when the new courthouse wing, including a new jail, is completed.

Some Little Notes On Art of Acting

By John Crosby

DORIS DALTON, a soap-opera actress of many faces, has more adventures in a week than a good many stage actresses in a lifetime, but recently she set some sort of record even for soap heroines for a single hectic afternoon.

In "The Romance of Helen Trent," as Betty Mallory, the best mother a girl ever had, Miss Dalton went wild with joy over the new buds on her portulaca. Two hours later, as Vivian Jarrett, a real nasty bit of fluff in "This is Nora Drake," she blackmailed a close friend for five grand. Two hours after that, all dressed up in her whites, Miss Dalton in the role of Allison Shaw, a female surgeon in "Young Widder Brown," yanked out an appendix. The portulaca and the patient were both doing fine, last I heard. The close friend is still pretty peeved.

ONE OF THE RARE, rich delights of the summer, when most of the big dramatic shows are taking a vacation from TV, are the old, old movies which are taking their places. Nothing like an old, old movie to revive old, old memories. For one thing the girls wore hair in those days, masses of the stuff. It was piled up on top of their heads, hung halfway to their waists and bounced all over the place when they walked.

An actress' hair was a valuable acting prop in those days. A girl could express a high degree of indignation by shaking her head, which instantly took on the aspect of an elm in a windstorm. Despair was generally indicated by running the fingers of both hands through the hair culminating at the neck.

One thing that hasn't changed through the years is the dialogue. Joan Bennett, who had been added like a spice to bring out the full, rich flavor of a movie called "The Housekeeper's Daughter," looked earnestly at the hero in that epic, as if she were seeing him for the first time, and said: "Robert—I—don't know how to tell you this, Robert, you've just got to listen to me. . . . Do you remember what you told me this morning?"

Ah, there's a wonderful line! It has a number of variants. "Do you remember what we promised each other last night?" "Do you remember what you told me the day we met? You said I reminded you of your mother. What's happened to us since then, Robert? What's happened?" Well, I'm not going to write the whole script. Let the movie boys do their own work.

ONE OTHER line from "The Housekeeper's Daughter" I'm particularly fond of. "Now you listen to me!" The reason I'm fond of this line is that it is a sure-fire indication the movie has only about eight minutes to go. In other words, the denouement is at hand. Better hurry up and finish the popcorn.

There have been a couple I've missed this summer. The kindly old warden, saying: "Sorry, Miss, time is up." Then there's the agent informing the singer that his wife has decided not to divorce him, the child will recover from polio and Louis B. Mayer was just on the phone offering him $10,000 a week: "Now go out there and sing your fool head off."

Want some more? "You look as if you've seen a ghost." "I have."

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Bill Gold is on vacation. His column today takes the form of a letter to his managing editor.

Dear Boss:

The prospect of starting for Charleston in the middle of the night appealed to none of us—especially since it was entirely likely that no hotel rooms would be available there, either.

About a mile down the Midland Trail (U. S. 60) from Gauley Bridge we came to the Electro Metallurgical plant at Glen Ferris. I was busy explaining to Walter that this was where the New and Gauley Rivers are harnessed to turn out some high-grade steel, used for armaments among other things. But his mind was on something else.

"Isn't that a hotel?" he asked, pointing to a neon sign. Sure enough, it was the Glen Ferris Inn, which I had passed dozens of times without ever seeing.

So our search for beds ended happily. For $3 a head we got nice rooms, and slept so soundly we didn't hear the ever-present hum of the dynamos in the plant next door.

In the morning we drove back to Gauley Bridge and breakfasted at the Conley Hotel. It's one of the few buildings that remains standing at this heavily traveled highway intersection.

The narrow, tortuous mile between Gauley Bridge and Glen Ferris is finally being widened, which means they had to rip out the solid row of frame shacks that formerly lined the highway.

If Daniel Boone were to retrace his steps today, he might have a little difficulty recognizing either the route or the architecture. You still see plenty of ramshackle wooden houses, usually in dire need of a coat of paint and with one end of the front porch sagging dangerously. But at most of them there's a 1950 car parked in the driveway and a television aerial on the roof.

The drive from Glen Ferris to Charleston never fails to thrill me. I'm still yokel enough to tingle when I see the coal coming out of the mountains on the right, conveyed in huge buckets on plodding, tireless pulleys, directly over the highway and into the gigantic plants that line the river on the left.

To me, it's a symbol of our Nation's vast natural wealth joining with our industrial know-how to give us a constantly rising standard of living.

At Alloy, W. Va., there's another Electro Metallurgical plant, this one perhaps 50 times bigger than the one at Glen Farris. Its coal and slag piles cover areas larger than the Ellipse.

On down the road you pass through communities with such picturesque names as Ona, Boomer, Diamond and Belle. West Virginians seem to have a penchant for such names. Elsewhere in the State are Nitro, War, Hurricane, Volcano, Frost, Cave Cyclone Tariff and (my favorite) Odd.

At Belle we passed the huge DuPont alkali plant, and watched a string of U. S. Army tank cars move out with a cargo that was probably destined eventually for Korea.

We arrived in Charleston simultaneously with the granddaddy of all rainstorms, but the natives took it with stoic calm.

My favorite parking lot, next to the Daniel Boone Hotel, used to charge 35 cents for all-day parking—and "all day" meant that if you came back within 24 hours there was no additional charge.

Now it's 35 cents for the first hour, and that sent me cruising off in search of a curb-side parking place.

Charleston's parking meters used to take pennies and nickels. A penny got you 12 minutes worth, two pennies 24, and so forth.

Now you can drop one nickel for one hour of parking, or two nickels for two hours.

Residents are justly proud of the new Kanawha Airport, which was built in typical West Virginia fashion. Construction engineers leveled three mountains to build runways large enough for modern passenger liners.

Nearby Coonskin Park is another improvement since my last visit. Local businessmen and contractors chipped in and built 220 acres of playgrounds, swimming pools and recreational areas in four hectic days of volunteer labor—a remarkable example of community spirit at work.

The coal industry, we learned, was going along at a "fair" clip, but the chemical plants are running full blast and giving the area a tremendous payroll, which tinkles through Charleston's stores and shops at a merry pace.

The brand new Woolworth store is typical of that new "face" of West Virginia's that I mentioned before. Few buildings in Washington can match its ultramodernistic styling. It looks as if they turned some bright young architect loose with a free hand, and told him to have fun.

The mile-long Carbide and Carbons plant at South Charleston seems to be even more cluttered with new buildings than ever before (if such a thing is possible) and next I suppose they'll fill in the river to make more room for expansion. The acrid smell and taste of chemicals fills the air as always.

Hard by Carbide, there's the Naval Ordnance Factory, also expanded to imposing size by new building. You can't escape the feeling that here in the Kanawha Valley stand the men behind the men behind the guns.

Bill.

P. S. Tomorrow we head for Huntington and then down the Ohio to "home." Walter says he can smell his grandmother's charcoal broiled steaks from here.

Pinckney Blocked From CAB Post

By Tom McNamara and Fred Blumenthal

(While Drew Pearson is on a brief vacation, his column is being written by members of his staff.)

This is the strange story of how James F. Pinckney, political science professor at North Carolina's Davidson College, almost was named chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Senator Graham

Truman was all set to appoint Pinckney, but changed his mind when he learned that the college professor had backed corporation lawyer Willis Smith against Senator Frank Graham in the recent North Carolina primary.

However, the President received no protest from Graham. In fact, when friends urged Graham to object to Pinckney's appointment, the Christianly Carolinian replied:

"I bear no grudges because I lost the election. Anybody has a right to oppose me, or vote against me, under our free, democratic system."

Graham's campaign managers, however, took a different view. Without his knowledge, they lodged a vigorous protest with the Democratic National Committee. Word was passed on to Truman, who dropped the college man like a hot rivet.

Note: Graham's fair-dealing in the battle against Smith sometimes left campaign workers goggle-eyed. When Graham saw one of his own campaign posters in a mill town, warning that mill workers' wages might drop to 10 cents an hour if Smith was elected, he promptly tore it down.

"That's untrue and unfair," Graham explained. "Everybody knows that mill workers will never go back to 10 cents an hour in these times."

Voteless Americans

The world looks upon Washington as the heart and hope of democracy, yet here are some unbelievable facts about the United States Capital: Only two capital cities outside the Iron Curtain do not permit their citizens to vote—Washington, D. C. and Canberra, Australia . . . Our American forefathers fought the Revolution because they were forced to pay taxes without representation. Yet, today, D. C. residents pay more Federal taxes than those in 25 of the 48 States, still get no voice in how those taxes are spent . . . Congress has granted suffrage to the natives of Guam, but still denies it to the citizens of the National Capital . . . Because American citizens living in Washington have no vote, Congress must take time out to decide petty, municipal problems. Last year Congress spent more than 3000 hours on local District matters . . . For example, it took acts of Congress to govern the sale of rock fish, to determine whether butter should be served at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and to decide what to do about a herd of goats in the District of Columbia . . . Once Congress had to interrupt the debate on the Marshall Plan to give D. C. officials the right to tear down a pair of old gateposts . . . A Gallup Poll shows that the public overwhelmingly favors giving their fellow Americans in Washington the right to vote. Both the Republican and Democratic parties have pledged home rule for the people of Washington. Yet Congress has ignored all this and pigeonholed the "home rule" bill.

Bean's Predictions

Washington's noted political dopester, Louis H. Bean, has given intimates some private postscripts to his new book on elections, "The Midterm Battle."

Though forecasting defeat for the big guns in the Senate, Bean admits a number of "fuzzy factors" make a prediction on the coming elections difficult.

"'One is Korea," says Bean. "If the war draws public attention away from politics, it might reduce the turnout of voters, which would hurt the Democrats in the big industrial centers."

This, plus a possible "protest" vote by those who blame the Administration for higher living costs, won't help the Democrats. On the other hand, Bean foresees the likelihood of a possible downward trend in isolationism this November, which would help Democratic candidates.

Weisband Background

Here is the background on William Wolfe Weisband of Arlington, Va., who was arrested in Los Angeles after being trailed by Government agents for months:

Last May, Weisband was abruptly suspended without pay from the Signal Corps Research Center, Arlington Hall, on the grounds that he was a bad security risk. Shortly after his suspension, Weisband and his wife drove to California "to see a friend."

The FBI had the pair under constant surveillance all the way from Washington to Los Angeles.

As Weisband was preparing to return to Washington, he was subpenaed by a Los Angeles Federal Grand Jury investigating espionage. At that time he was asked only a few perfunctory questions—his name, age, home address, etc. He was ordered to come before the grand jury one week later, for further questioning.

This time he failed to show up, giving the excuse that he had insufficient funds to remain in Los Angeles. So he returned home—with the FBI against trailing him across the country.

On August 2, Weisband received a third summons to appear before the Los Angeles grand jury. He decided to comply with this order and returned to the West Coast. Upon his arrival on August 16, he was arrested and jailed on a technical charge of contempt, for failing to respond to the second subpoena.

A stocky, dark-haired man in his early forties, Weisband before the war was a hotel clerk in Los Angeles. In 1942 he entered the Army and was later commissioned a lieutenant.

(Note: Weisband's pretty, raven-haired wife, a North Carolina girl whom he married 18 months ago, was also separated from the same Government agency. However, the FBI does not suspect her of being mixed up in any spying.)
